Summary of Information

X Site is a structure on land with several secondary structures in the immediate vicinity. There is water in the midst of the structures that is channeled and controlled. In the vicinity of the structures is a significant area of vegetation. Some of the structures seem to be uniformly square, arranged in a geometric pattern, and sheltered by some sort of overhanging structure. There is also a rounded, spherical object that is covered by regularly spaced, corrugated shapes. There are also very tall, slim, stanchion-like shapes that are crowned by a smaller oblong shape. The whole site is very complex, with grey, beige, and similar neutral colors predominating. Part of it in general seems to involve a cavernous or voluminous area under one roof. People are here, but there tend to be many more present at certain times than usual.
