"Altered States of Consciousness and PSI"

In psychic functioning, we deliberately eliminate information flow irrelevant to the target from the outside world. Noise is always present which influences the output. Sensory isolation techniques have been utilized to reduce this problem.

Psychic functioning is latent in ordinary consciousness. The psychic receptor transforms information into a form useful for mind processing. Once it is activated, four routes of information flow ~~is~~ possible. The first occurs rarely and is subtle when the viewer has a fleeting representation of the target. The like second is when a memory image corresponds to the target. The great third involves psychic information expressed through bodily sensations. The last comes from the psychic receptor to the conscious producing a variety of effects, wherein the psychic information is transformed in accordance with an individual's unconscious. How all of these routes operate is affected by our state of consciousness. Any state of consciousness is a system. The parts interact with each other to form a particular pattern. Psychic functioning is also affected by emotions and time and space. Only a fraction of the studies on psi deal with the effects of altered states; the results are tentative.
