There is a small group of people talking among themselves-- they are organizing planning an activity that involves violence and an operation. They are taking the whole thing very abstractly; they don't consider the impact their action will have on individual human beings. It's something they've planned and they'll go through with it come heck or high water. At what seems to be a later time, there is a sense of viewing a "target" location from a slightly higher elevation so as to look down on it, and the feeling of "observing". There is further a sense of firing something--allowing for travel time, distance, arcing/trajectory, impact--solid connection with intended goal. People involved experience solid feeling of satisfaction--"job well done"--about that part. Occurs at time of limited visibility "like" early morning/early evening/inclement weather. Visibility conditions chosen because some light necessary for mission accomplishment but low visibility aids in successful attack/then escape. Some people involved are wearing tan or light olive clothing. Considerable distance between "launch" point and impact, but still within sight of each other. (AOL/S-AOL/Bk of attack being conducted from aircraft.) Sense of satisfaction is greater because "target" structure is regarded as highly protected, and hence essentially safe. This activity seems connected to other activity elsewhere, and may besides its direct purpose, also serve to distract from another crucial operation elsewhere, which is less overt but equally important, and may have to do with actual physical penetration by a small group of a guarded, secured area and escaping with some desired individual. AI/Bk of a sudden, jaw-jarring concussion. Impression of a smooth, cylindrical, tapered, swiftly moving object--sharp pointed, smooth, rounded object moving rapidly through the air.
