Summary of Information

A group of people are present at the site going to and fro, carrying bundles and stacking them up. A sense of arranging, stockpiling, staging ("in the sense of staging an operation"), of preparing is present. The bundles are of varying sizes, some rather large, and soft sided, though tightly packed. [An AOL was produced of bales of tobacco and cotton sitting by the river bank in the Old South waiting for the steamboat to pick them up.] These bundles are "preparing to move." They are collected together outside in the open air in a sort of a clearing in a forested area that is warm and humid with a large, relatively placid water course nearby. This is a different place than reported in Session 001, but there is some sort of connection between the two.
