SERIES B.1. y.

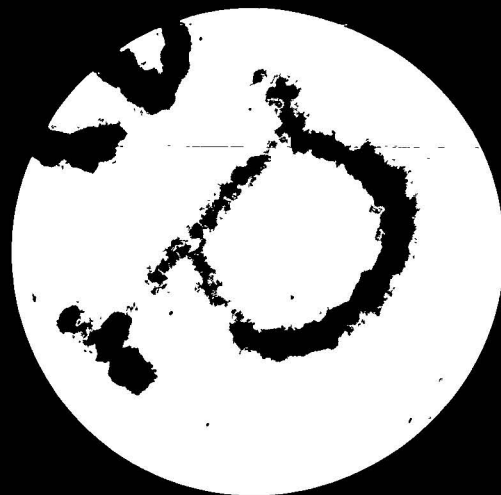

There is an interruption in the typeface of the descender of the small letter y in all of the imprints of this letter by the so-called Hiss typewriter. There is no apparent break in the descender of this letter "y" type in the imprints of this letter seen in the photocopy of the Hiss standard.

SERIES B.2. p.

There is a complete break in the descender of the main element of the small letter p in about 90% of the times which this letter appears in the samples typed by the so-called Hiss machine. The photocopies of the Hiss document give no indication of this particular deterioration in the small letter "p".

SERIES B. 3. m.

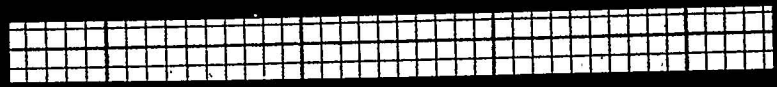

In almost all of the imprints of the letter m in the photocopy of the Hiss document the highest part of the loops appears to be farther to the right and slightly different in shape than the more rounded loops of the small letter m in the samples typed by the so-called Hiss machine.

SERIES B. 4, u.

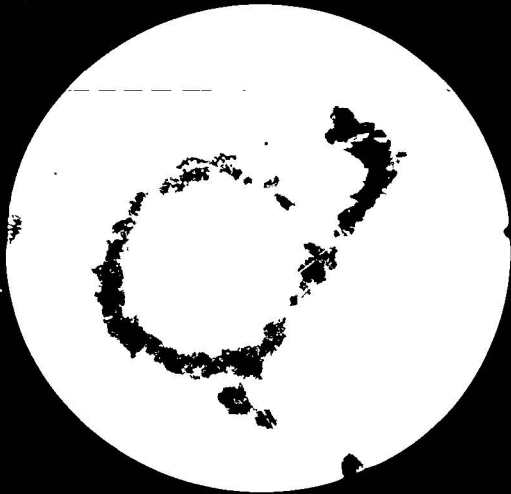

The lower right seriph of the small letter u appears to be horizontal in almost a third of the times which this letter appears in the photocopy of the Hiss document while it appears to be consistently slanted downward at an angle in the imprints of this letter made by the Hiss machine. The attachment of this lower right seriph to the main element of the letter appears abnormal in the so-called Hiss machine. The printing surface of this seriph seems to be set on a lower level than the typeface of the rest of the letter. The upper seriph of this letter also often appear slanted at a different angle in the imprints of this letter in the Hiss document from those made by the Hiss machine.

SERIES B. 5. d.

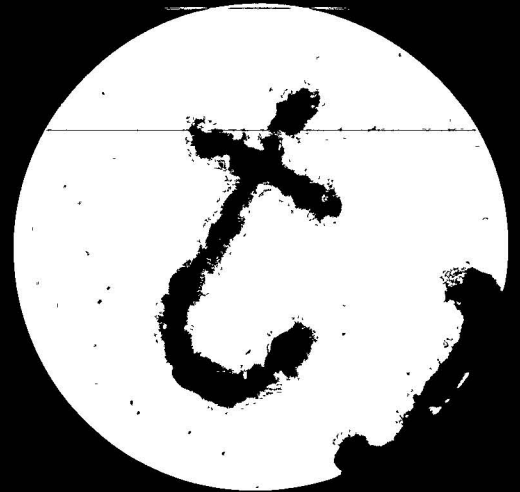

The seriph at the foot of the terminal element of the small letter d is manifest horizontally, apparently at full length in about a third of the imprints of this letter in the Hiss document. This seriph at the foot of the right side of the letter d is manifest only occasionally, and then, very short in length, in the imprints of this letter found in the samples typed by the so-called Hiss machine.
