Subject: Re: Glad you're there

PS 2 more reactions: 1) the US Army operations people at the site were very clear they thought people were generally orderly and provided there was some basic order at food depots etc, people wld follow it. But, at the hospital I talked to one of the photographers I recognized from our travels yrs ago Mom and he said he was out around the city today and noticed people were less orderly than yesterday, particularly at 1 of the food distribution sites where the truck just pulled up and dumped food - which is both inefficient and inexcusable for reasons we all know

2) Sanitation will be a HUGE problem very soon. The hospital has NO facilities. If we do not build group latrines, or dig latrine trenches or build group composite toilets or some other alternative, we could have a water-borne disease outbreak- thankfully, perversely, most people are drinking bottled water now in most places but there are neighborhoods apparently where people are drinking from the tap still- if that gets contaminated, or if these tent cities become de facto mini camp sites and the quantity of water remains too low, and people start using water for multiply purposes, we could see a second wave disaster. That's what happened at the Kivu and other camps post Rwanda- tens of thousands of more people died post genocide of cholera.
