The Center for Public Integrity looks at this closer and shows what kind of foreign influence we are looking at:

One prominent example is CITGO Petroleum Company — once the American-born Cities Services Company, but purchased and has sharply criticized both of the past two U.S. presidents, to spend government funds to defeat an American political candidate, just by having

And it's not just Chavez. The Saudi government owns Houston's Saudi Refining Company and half of Motiva Enterprises. Len U.S. port operations. A weakening of the limit on corporate giving could mean China, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, and any other country that own

I really can't see Americans being too happy about this.

Dahlia Lithwick reported for Slate <<http://www.slate.com/id/2242208/>> from the Supreme Court as the opinions were being read. She offered

While Stevens is reading the portion of his concurrence about the "cautious view of corporate power" held by the framers, I see Justice
Was it a disdainful chuckle at the impotence of his colleague? Was it merely a chuckle of disagreement, of good-natured exasperation? Was it
