Good luck on the shows tomorrow.

All you can do is be for reform, the internet, letting Egyptians solve their own problems, monitoring events closely, studying all options, in touch with everyone everywhere, on alert and committed to Israel security.

The politics on Egypt are much more treacherous than they appear - the president gave his speech in Cairo effectively calling for more democracy and if the Islamists take over in Egypt, foreign policy will be blamed for creating another Iran, as let's face it any vote in Egypt is likely to back anti-israel, pro-islam forces possibly further destabilizing the region. And those who start a revolution rarely wind up holding the power and rarely wind up governing any differently, whether it is Cuba or Iran. The problem is that the US is going from owning Mubarak to owning the revolution as it tips towards the protesters without any real ability to affect either party or the outcome.
