I used to like Ajami back in the early 90's when he was a frequent CBS analyst. But he's lost all sense of perspective and nuance. To some extent he undermines his argument by the unrelenting negativity and meanness (even to the point of suggesting historians might not even pay attention to HRC - unbelievable!). Agree that, while a specific response likely unnecessary, there will be a need to mount a vigorous defense of the record by allies, in the form of op-eds, speeches, and availability to comment as others write perspective pieces.

It would be good to have (perhaps it already exists) both a short and long "accomplishments" list that friends and others can have to bolster support. While there is most definitely a generalized sense that she's done a great job, I think for many it's a thin and relatively uninformed understanding that would benefit from talking points that provide specific examples (of which I'm sure there are many).

The world is being transformed, in part, by the leaders and people in new democracies - people who saw what we had and wanted it.
Most importantly he has a book to sell. Think Ted should read the book and prepare a response to XXX. Just for our use, not that this guy should get a response but so we start our As to the incoming Qs.

Hillary and the Hollowness of 'People-to-People' Diplomacy

Nearly a million miles in the air. And U.S. power is diminished.

By FOUAD AJAMI

The sight of Hillary Clinton cutting a rug on the dance floor this week in South Africa gives away the moral obtuseness of America's chief diplomat. That image will tell the people of the besieged Syrian city of Aleppo, under attack by a merciless regime, all they need to know about the heartlessness of U.S. foreign policy.

True authority over foreign affairs has been vested in the White House, and for that matter, in the Obama campaign apparatus. All the great decisions on foreign policy—Iraq and Afghanistan, the struggle raging in Syria, the challenge posed by the Iranian regime—have been subjugated to the needs of the campaign. All that is left for Mrs. Clinton is the pomp and ceremony and hectic travel schedule.

Much has been made of her time in the air. She is now officially the most traveled secretary of state in American history. She has logged, by one recent count, 843,458 miles and visited 102 countries. (This was before her recent African swing; doubtless her handlers will revise the figures.) In one dispatch, it was breakfast in Vietnam, lunch in Laos, dinner in Cambodia. Officially, she's always the life of the party.

This is foreign policy trivialized. If Harry Truman's secretary of state, Dean Acheson, was "present at the creation" of the post-World War II order of states, historians who bother with Mrs. Clinton will judge her as marking time, a witness to the erosion of U.S. authority in the international order.

After settling into her post in early 2009, she made it clear that the "freedom agenda" of the prior administration would be sacrificed. "Ideology is so yesterday," she bluntly proclaimed in April of that year. This is what her boss had intended all along. The herald of change in international affairs, the man who had hooked crowds in Paris and Berlin and Cairo, was, at heart, a trimmer, timid about America's possibilities beyond its shores.
