

RELEASE IN PART B6

Re: The sobering and not so sobering...

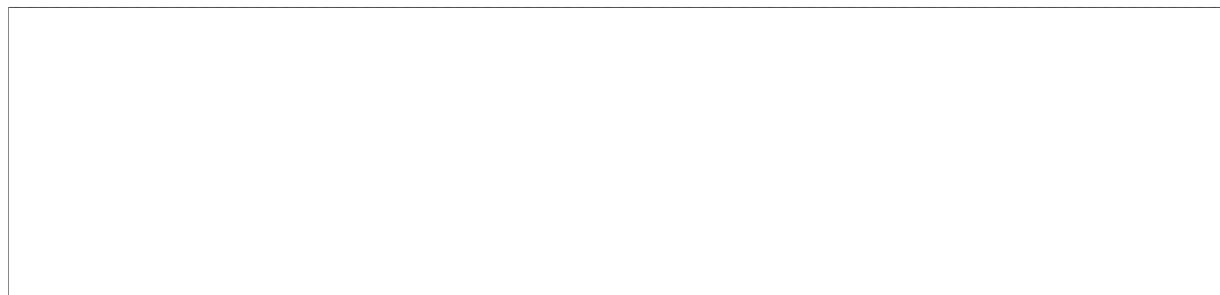

From: Burns Strider [redacted]

B6

To: Senator Clinton Hillary hdr22@clintonemail.com; Minyon Moore [redacted]

CC: bstrider [redacted]

Subject: Re: The sobering and not so sobering...

I'm glad you're home. You were awesome out there. It was like watching America be America again... Showcasing our greatness thru friendship, Embodying our ideals by example, sharing our values in dialogue and discussion... It was watching the best of the American dream in action.

I often attended one of the legal churches when I was in Beijing... If one knew where to look, washed over or chiseled away "Methodist mission" signs could be seen... The location I attended had actually been the Methodist Mission prior to Mao... It was the primary legal church so it may have been the one you attended! Sadly, I didn't encounter any purpose-driven preaching!?? [redacted]

-----Original Message-----

From: Senator Clinton Hillary

To: Burns Strider

To: Moore Minyon

ReplyTo: Senator Clinton Hillary

Subject: Re: The sobering and not so sobering...

Sent: Feb 22, 2009 6:46 PM

I just landed from Riceland and am not thinking about all the challenges in the world but wondering why you are

B6

Have you had your rice today?

I went to church in Beijing this am. It was an official one but the young pastor gave a dynamic sermon about our duty to be good housekeepers of the earth. He also know Rick Warren which I deduced when he ended by encouraging his flock to lead "purpose-driven lives."

-----Original Message-----

From: Burns Strider

To: Senator Clinton Hillary

To: Minyon Moore

ReplyTo: bstrider

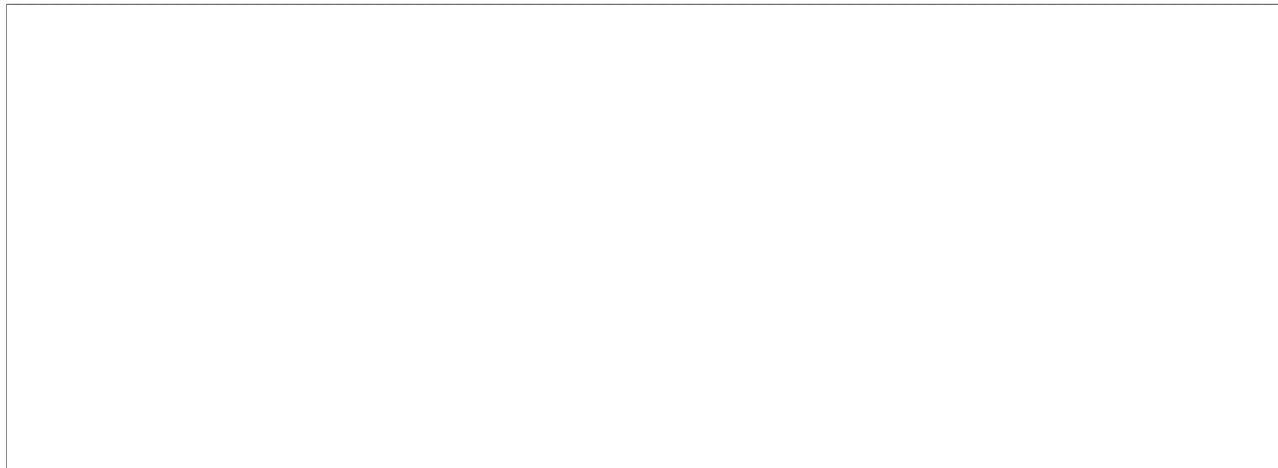

Sent: Feb 22, 2009 12:37 PM

Subject: The sobering and not so sobering...

In honor of the boss lady's historic week...

"Sikh jo fahn mai-a"

-- Cantonese for "have you had your rice yet?" This is the standard mid-day greeting for Cantonese speakers... It can simply be a warm hello or an invitation to lunch. It showcases the incredible impact of rice on the culture, even in standard greetings...

Okay, the not so sobering joke of the day:

"There were two cannibals who unsuspectingly captured a comedian and made him into a stew. While the cannibals were eating the stew, one asked the other, "Does this taste funny to you?" ---- hahahaha. Have a good day!

Burns Strider

Burns Strider