

Re: now ladies, I just don't know how to take this... so you be the judge

From: Minyon Moore [redacted]

RELEASE IN PART B6

To: Cheryl Mills [redacted] Hillary Clinton HDR22@clintonemail.com; Maggie Williams
[redacted] Capricia Marshall [redacted]

B6

Subject: Re: now ladies, I just don't know how to take this... so you be the judge

Well said...

From: Cheryl Mills
To: Minyon Moore; hdr22@clintonemail.com ; williamsbarrett [redacted]; 'Capricia Marshall'
Sent: Wed Jun 30 21:51:50 2010
Subject: RE: now ladies, I just don't know how to take this... so you be the judge ummm - hard to imagine how you can do two swipes at once - one at him and one at us - but this manages to do so

From: Minyon Moore [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Wednesday, June 30, 2010 12:30 PM
To: hdr22@clintonemail.com; williamsbarrett [redacted] cheryl.mills@gmail.com; Capricia Marshall
Subject: now ladies, I just don't know how to take this... so you be the judge

Obama: Our first female president

By Kathleen Parker
Wednesday, June 30, 2010; A17

If Bill Clinton was our first black president, as Toni Morrison once proclaimed, then Barack Obama may be our first woman president.

Phew. That was fun. Now, if you'll just keep those hatchets holstered and hear me out.

No, I'm not calling Obama a girlie president. But . . . he may be suffering a rhetorical-testosterone deficit when it comes to dealing with crises, with which he has been richly endowed.

It isn't that he isn't "cowboy" enough, as others have suggested. Aren't we done with that? It is that his approach is feminine in a normative sense. That is, we perceive