Subject: Re Libya

B6

There are indications he wants to speak again. As far as I can see the situation remains difficult but inconclusive. I think we're moving to the point of offering an ultimatum that allows him out with the threat of increasing action; or, if the opposition don't succeed quickly, we will be under pressure to intervene. At present he thinks there's no way out. The decision is whether to offer him one. If he refuses it opens up the options. The risk for us is tough words that beg the question of tough actions. But thought your statement tonight got balance right. We may have a few days but not much more.
