Some thoughts:

[redacted]

B5
B6

On the younger side, so less stature but bolder moves:

[redacted]

Let's discuss how to do.

But let me ask this ques - who has your stature that if this was a blank slate that you would rec to succeed you?

Cheryl,
As I look at all the holes that are already becoming apparent re our ability to do development as I phase out and if [redacted] were not here, I wonder again if we shdnt try to hire [redacted] as deputy director for development in S/P before I leave or w/ the transition (this is assuming [redacted] succeeds me). Given how much time I put in to trying to get the rest of the building to pay attention to development and to pushing that entire part of S's agenda (as do u, of course), which [redacted] will not do except as specifically tasked, I am increasingly worried about what is going to happen. I think she wd take the job if properly formulated, and we will HAVE an open slot by the end of the year (I just found that out.) But ithe trick is making it a deputy directorship -- like a DAS anywhere else.
