APHIS Posts Investigative and Enforcement Services Annual Enforcement Data Reports

The U.S. Department of Agricultures (USDA) Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) is posting its fiscal year 2020 enforcement activity summary data, which provides information about enforcement efforts in the areas of biotechnology, agricultural quarantine inspection, animal and plant health, and animal welfare and horse protection. APHIS Investigative and Enforcement Services (IES) investigates alleged violations of the statutes and regulations administered by Agency programs.

The FY 2020 data is presented in the same format as the previous two years and is designed to provide stakeholders with a broad view of the Agencys efforts to promote compliance with regulations to protect American agriculture.

The FY 2020 enforcement summary data is available at: Caution-https://www.aphis.usda.gov/aphis/ourfocus/business-services/ies.

Today's Top 5

1. This is why the National Guard didn't respond to the attack on the Capitol
Military Times
Hundreds of National Guard troops were posted in the streets of Washington, D.C., on Wednesday afternoon, but there was little they could do to respond as pro-Trump rioters overran the Capitol.

2. 'I thought I'd have to fight my way out': Combat veteran lawmakers took action after Capitol stormed
Washington Post

On Wednesday, after chemical irritants were fired in the Capitol to repel a pro-Trump mob, Rep. Ruben Gallego thought of the moment years ago when he entered a Marine Corps gas chamber.

3. Army secretary: 6,200 National Guard troops to be in DC area 'by the weekend'
Army Times
By the end of the weekend, there will be 6,200 National Guard troops from six states and the District of Columbia deployed in the National Capitol Region, Army Secretary Ryan McCarthy said in a Thursday press conference. The personnel will be on duty for "no less than the next 30 days," said McCarthy.

Space Force

Did the Space Force just ruin OTAs for everyone?
Breaking Defense
A contracting slip-up by the Space Force has inspired new scrutiny of a streamlined acquisition process known as Other Transaction Authority (OTA). OTAs have soared in popularity in recent years, but a story by The Washington Post — which said a Space Force contractor “acted fraudulently” and derided OTAs in general as a “loophole” — has given skeptics new ammunition in their fight for restrictions.

The Justice Department announced today that three Sri Lankan citizens have been charged with terrorism offenses, including conspiring to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization (ISIS). The men were part of a group of ISIS supporters which called itself "ISIS in Sri Lanka." That group is responsible for the 2019 Easter attacks in the South Asian nation of Sri Lanka, which killed 268 people, including five U.S. citizens, and injured over 500 others, according to a federal criminal complaint unsealed today.

AWARENESS BULLETIN

NATIONAL CRISIS COORDINATION CENTER (NC3) SITUATIONAL AWARENESS: WEAPONS STOCKPILE AT US CAPITOL BREACH SUBJECT'S RESIDENCE

January 10, 2021

(U//LES) On 10 January 2021, FBI agents conducted a search warrant of a residence associated with an individual identified as illegally entering the US Capitol on 6 January 2021. The individual was pictured wearing body armor and a combat helmet on the floor of the US Capitol. The search located the below pictured weapons.

(U) The FBI suggests arresting agencies exercise caution and consider use of SWAT when affecting the arrest of individuals who displayed body armor or other armament during criminal activity conducted at the US Capitol.

For further information or to report similar incidents, contact the National Crisis Coordination Center at NC3@fbi.gov.

(U) LAW ENFORCEMENT SENSITIVE: The information marked (U//LES) in this document is the property of the FBI and may be distributed within the Federal Government (and its contractors), US intelligence, law enforcement public safety or protection officials and individuals with a need to know. Distribution beyond these entities without FBI authorization is prohibited. Precautions should be taken to ensure this information is stored and/or destroyed in a manner that precludes unauthorized access. Information bearing the LES caveat may not be used in legal proceeding without first receiving authorization from the originating agency. Recipients are prohibited from subsequently posting the information marked LES on a website or an unclassified network.

Cyber Security

- The U.S. Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) confirmed that the threat actor behind the SolarWinds hack also used password guessing and password spraying attacks to breach targets, media reported on FridayZDNet < Caution-https://nam02.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Ftinyurl.com%2Fy4x6tjll&data=04%7C01%7Ccconnolly%40techopsolutions.net%7C1fc9f0d7a0a24d2bf1ec08d8b5361754%7C5771c6630b964c5f86745091dcd378bd%7C1%7C0%7C637458591215458571%7CUnknown%7CTWFpbGZsb3d8eyJWIjoiMC4wLjAwMDAiLCJQIjoiV2luMzIiLCJBTiI6Ik1haWwiLCJXVCI6Mn0%3D%7C1000&sdata=jndWpG430HLuelQFuOGuWXobVIcAI7W7N%2FF6VwyMES8%3D&reserved=0 >

- In their statement made on Wednesday, the agency said, "CISA incident response investigations have identified that initial access in some cases was obtained by password guessing, password spraying, and inappropriately secured administrative credentials accessible via external remote access services"
- Once threat actors gained access to internal networks or cloud infrastructure, they escalated access to gain administrator rights and forged authentication tokens that allowed them to access other local or cloud-hosted resources inside a company's network
- CISA published a second advisory to help victims deal with these "to-cloud" escalations, with guidance on how to search Microsoft-based cloud setups for traces of this group's activity and then remediate servers
    - The company added that the guidance is "irrespective of the initial access vector" that the SolarWinds hackers initially leveraged and should apply even if the initial access vector was the Orion app or a password guessing/spraying attack

NOC 0602-18: Southwest Border Operations – U.S. Southwest Border

- Guatemalan and Honduran soldiers will be deployed to prevent new U.S.-bound migrant caravans from advancing, military officials said, amid signs that some groups will depart later this month, media reported SaturdayReuters < Caution- https://nam02.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Ftinyurl.com%2Fyxzh683g&data=04%7C01%7Ccconnolly%40techopsolutions.net%7C54391b5c8f8c4cc7065608d8b608763b%7C5771c6630b964c5f86745091dcd378bd%7C1%7C0%7C637459494748748684%7CUnknown%7CTWFpbGZsb3d8eyJWIjoiMC4wLjAwMDAiLCJQIjoiV2luMzIiLCJBTiI6Ik1haWwiLCJXVCI6Mn0%3D%7C1000&sdata=Ggz2TSmti5hQrPaQ0zjOLnkIpvZlJ0s%2FbMK0He4eRBE%3D&reserved=0 >
    - In online forums, many Hondurans have indicated they plan to leave next weekend in a new caravan, which has caught the attention of U.S. officials who have called on the region's governments to stop them
    - A Guatemalan military spokesman said on Friday that up to 4,000 soldiers would be deployed to stop the migrants from entering en masse
    - A Honduran senior military officer said earlier this week that soldiers would also be deployed in his country in a bid to preemptively stop any caravans

- A U.S. District judge in San Francisco blocked the White House's recent set of asylum restrictions in an order issued on Friday, media reported on Saturday KSBY (AP) < Caution-https://nam02.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Ftinyurl.com%2Fy3kxojek&data=04%7C01%7Ccconnolly%40techopsolutions.net%7C54391b5c8f8c4cc7065608d8b608763b%7C5771c6630b964c5f86745091dcd378bd%7C1%7C0%7C637459494748748684%7CUnknown%7CTWFpbGZsb3d8eyJWIjoiMC4wLjAwMDAiLCJQIjoiV2luMzIiLCJBTiI6Ik1haWwiLCJXVCI6Mn0%3D%7C1000&sdata=iqJ71AM%2FYQEPpr2zuRGMtKKh7L48aR6uPH5Tc2qWPO4%3D&reserved=0 >
    - The rules had been set to take effect Monday and would have redefined how people qualify for asylum by broadening the grounds for a judge to deem asylum applications "frivolous," and narrowing the types of persecution and severity of threats for which asylum is granted
    - The San Francisco judge said the administration lacked authority to impose the restrictions
        - The judge said his ruling applies nationwide because limiting its reach "would result in a fragmented and disjointed patchwork of immigration policy"
    - Also Friday, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Virginia, ruled against the administration's policy that gave state and local governments the right to refuse to resettle refugees

    - In a letter to the DHS, the mayor called for several specific steps to be taken, including an extension of the special security period surrounding the inauguration, the declaration of a pre-disaster zone, and increased coordination between federal law enforcement agencies to secure federal buildings with the hopes of allowing D.C. police to respond to the city's other needs
    - The mayor asked DHS to expand the already-declared special security period from its current duration of January 19 to January 21, to January 11 to January 24
    - The mayor also asked the U.S. Department of Justice to direct the FBI to provide daily security briefings from January 11 to January 24 and the U.S. Department of the Interior to cancel any public gathering permits approved for that period and to not issue any new permits

Cyber Security

- Denver-based short line rail operator and logistics provider OmniTRAX was hit by a recent ransomware attack and data theft that targeted its corporate parent, Broe Group, media reported Saturday FreightWaves < Caution-https://nam02.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Ftinyurl.com%2Fyy6mvlul&data=04%7C01%7Ccconnolly%40techopsolutions.net%7C54391b5c8f8c4cc7065608d8b608763b%7C5771c6630b964c5f86745091dcd378bd%7C1%7C0%7C637459494748788514%7CUnknown%7CTWFpbGZsb3d8eyJWIjoiMC4wLjAwMDAiLCJQIjoiV2luMzIiLCJBTiI6Ik1haWwiLCJXVCI6Mn0%3D%7C1000&sdata=ClVsqVAY2bGUfonz7K5r0O0C5HgWg%2FkEG7YkL4YpZg4%3D&reserved=0 >
    - The attack occurred sometime before December 24, 2020, based on the timing of the ransomware gang's post
        - A sample of the 70 gigabyte-sized leaked files includes internal OmniTRAX documents, including the apparent contents of individual employee work computers
    - OmniTRAX operates 21 short line railroads in the United States and one in Canada, and while there was no indication of operational impacts, the short line railroads play an essential role in the North American supply chain by linking shippers with the larger rail networks
    - The incident reportedly represents the first publicly known case of a so-called double-exhortation ransomware attack against a U.S. freight rail operator

Man Arrested for Illegally Entering Office of Speaker of the House

Richard Barnett, 60, of Gravette, Arkansas was arrested today in Bentonville, Arkansas on multiple criminal charges related to his alleged unlawful activities earlier this week at the U.S. Capitol Building where he was photographed with his feet up on a desk in the Speaker of the House of Representatives' office.

Barnett is scheduled to make his initial appearance in federal court on Tuesday. He will ultimately be extradited to Washington, D.C.

"The shocking images of Mr. Barnett with his boots up on a desk in the Speaker of the House's office on Wednesday was repulsive," said Jeffrey A. Rosen, Acting Attorney General of the United States. "Those who are proven to have committed criminal acts during the storming of the Capitol will face justice."

According to court documents, U.S. Capitol Police learned that an individual had entered the restricted office area of the Speaker of the House of Representatives Nancy Pelosi and was photographed with his feet propped up on furniture. Those photos were circulated on numerous news media platforms which identified the individual as Barnett. A search of law enforcement databases confirmed that the individual in the news photographs did in fact appear to be Barnett.

"This case is just one in a number that demonstrate the brazen acts that were committed at the Capitol on Wednesday," said Michael Sherwin, Acting U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia. "My Office is committed to prosecuting all individuals who participated in these abhorrent acts to the fullest extent of the law."

"The U.S. Capitol is one of the most iconic buildings in our country and a symbol of the Constitution and people we have sworn to protect, and its destruction will not be tolerated," said Steven M. D'Antuono, Assistant Director in Charge of the FBI Washington Field Office. "This arrest demonstrates to all individuals involved in January 6 incursion into the U.S. Capitol that the FBI will find you and hold you accountable for your crimes, no matter your location. We thank the FBI Little Rock Field Office for their quick assistance in bringing this perpetrator to justice."

Barnett is charged with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and theft of public money, property, or records. If convicted, he faces a maximum penalty of one year in prison. Actual sentences for federal crimes are typically less than the maximum penalties. A federal district court judge will determine any sentence after taking into account the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines and other statutory factors.

This case is being investigated by the U.S. Capitol Police and the FBI's Washington Field Office, with the assistance of the Justice Department's National Security Division and the FBI's Little Rock Field Office.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Nicole McClain of the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia is prosecuting the case.

A criminal complaint is merely an accusation. The defendant is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Three Foreign Nationals Charged with Conspiring to Provide Material Support to ISIS

The men were allegedly members of a group of ISIS supporters that carried out terrorist attacks in Sri Lanka on Easter Day in 2019, killing 268 people

The Justice Department announced today that three Sri Lankan citizens have been charged with terrorism offenses, including conspiring to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization (ISIS). The men were part of a group of ISIS supporters which called itself "ISIS in Sri Lanka." That group is responsible for the 2019 Easter attacks in the South Asian nation of Sri Lanka, which killed 268 people, including five U.S. citizens, and injured over 500 others, according to a federal criminal complaint unsealed today.

The complaint outlines the defendants' roles in the conspiracy and the events that led to near-simultaneous suicide bombings in the Sri Lankan cities of Colombo, Negombo and Batticaloa on April 21, 2019. One of the U.S. citizens killed was a Department of Commerce employee who had traveled to Sri Lanka on official business.

Two days after the attacks, ISIS claimed credit for the terrorist acts, attributing the murders to "Islamic State fighters." In late April 2019, the then-leader of ISIS praised the attackers for what he called a retaliation against "the West" for defeating ISIS the prior month in Baghuz, Syria.

"ISIS's Easter attacks in Sri Lanka killed 268 people, including five Americans, many while they worshiped," said Assistant Attorney General for National Security John C. Demers. "Today, we charge these defendants with bearing their share of the responsibility for these deaths. According to these charges, the defendants were committed supporters of ISIS, recruited others to ISIS's violent cause, purchased materials for and made IEDs, helped to prepare and trained others who participated in the attacks, and murdered in the name of this deadly foreign terrorist organization. They are in custody in Sri Lanka. We fully support the Sri Lankan investigation and prosecution of these terrorists and will continue to work with the authorities there to pursue our shared goal of holding these defendants accountable for their crimes. At the same time, these charges reflect that the U.S. justice system remains a powerful tool to bring to bear against those who harm our citizens abroad. We will continue to pursue justice for the victims of these heinous attacks and for all American victims of terrorism."

"This case clearly demonstrates that the United States will take decisive action to ensure terrorists face justice when they target Americans anywhere in the world," said Nick Hanna, the U.S. Attorney for the Central District of California. "The United States remains confident in the Sri Lankan authorities' ability to bring the perpetrators to justice – and this complaint makes clear that we stand ready with these charges in the event the defendants attempt to evade justice."

"The domestic charges announced today for an attack on foreign soil represent the FBI's commitment to deliver justice to traveling American victims and to protect U.S. interests here and abroad," said Kristi K. Johnson, the Assistant Director in Charge of the FBI's Los Angeles Field Office. "For decades, and particularly since 9/11, the FBI has deployed agents to various parts of the world to establish an investigative foothold and to liaison with local counterparts with a shared goal of combatting terror globally. Our enduring hope is that criminal prosecution – whether domestic or foreign – will bring some peace to the hundreds of victims killed or injured in Sri Lanka as a result of this horrific attack."

The criminal case filed on Dec. 11, 2020, in the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles is the result of a nearly two-year investigation by the FBI, which assisted Sri Lankan authorities in the wake of the suicide bombings that targeted Christian churches and luxury hotels frequented by Westerners. The defendants named in the complaint, along with other suspects linked to the attacks, currently are detained in Sri Lanka, where a criminal investigation is ongoing.

According to the complaint, the three charged defendants and others involved in the conspiracy – including eight terrorists who died in the suicide bombings – conspired to provide, provided, and attempted to provide material support, including services and personnel, to ISIS through various actions, including: (1) creating, maintaining, and serving as members of a group of ISIS supporters in Sri Lanka devoted to ISIS, its ideology, and to planning and encouraging violent attacks to advance ISIS's goals; (2) obtaining explosive materials and IED components; (3) manufacturing and testing IEDs, including the types of IEDs ultimately used in the attack; (4) recruiting other ISIS in Sri Lanka members; (5) using ISIS-created training materials to instruct and train the attackers and their co-conspirators in the use of firearms and explosives; (6) procuring safe houses for the group to prepare for attacks in the name of ISIS, including the Easter Attacks, while avoiding law enforcement detection; (7) following ISIS directives to use specific end-to-end encrypted messaging applications to conceal the criminal conspiracy; (8) murdering two Sri Lankan police offers to obtain the officers' firearms; and (9) shooting a suspected police informant.

The three defendants named in the criminal complaint, all of whom pledged allegiance to ISIS, are:

- Mohamed Naufar, the "second emir" for the group of ISIS supporters that called itself "ISIS in Sri Lanka," who allegedly led the group's propaganda efforts, recruited others to join ISIS, and led a series of multi-day military-type trainings;
- Mohamed Anwar Mohamed Riskan, who allegedly helped manufacture the IEDs used in the Easter Attacks; and
- Ahamed Milhan Hayathu Moahmed, who allegedly executed a police officer in order to obtain the officer's firearm, shot a suspected informant, and scouted a location for a separate terrorist attack.

All three defendants are charged with conspiring to provide, providing, and attempting to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization. Additionally, Naufar and Milhan are charged with aiding and abetting the receipt of military-type training from ISIS.

The FBI-led Joint Terrorism Task Force in Los Angeles, including personnel assigned responsibilities for extraterritorial matters, is leading the investigation. This matter is being prosecuted by Assistant U.S. Attorneys Annamartine Salick, George E. Pence IV and Christine M. Ro of the Terrorism and Export Crimes Section, and Trial Attorney Alicia Cook of the National Security Division's Counterterrorism Section. The Criminal Division's Office of International Affairs provided valuable assistance.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Friday, January 8, 2021

Two Quebec Men Extradited to North Dakota from Canada as Part of 'Operation Denial'

The Department of Justice announced today that Canadian authorities extradited two alleged members of an international fentanyl trafficking organization.

Acting Assistant Attorney General David P. Burns of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, U.S. Attorney Drew H. Wrigley of the District of North Dakota and U.S. Attorney Billy J. Williams of the District of Oregon made the announcement.

Jason Joey Berry, aka Daniel Desnoyers, 37, of Montreal, Quebec, and Xuan Cahn Nguyen, aka Jackie, aka Jackie Chan, 41, of Point-Aux-Tremble, Quebec, arrived in North Dakota Wednesday and had their initial court appearance and arraignment before U.S. Magistrate Judge Alice Senechal today. Their case is assigned to Chief U.S. District Judge Peter D. Welte.

Berry was arrested on Oct. 18, 2019, and Nguyen was arrested on Jan. 16, 2020, by Canadian authorities at the request of the United States. Both Berry and Nguyen were ordered surrendered by the Canadian Minister of Justice on Nov. 30, 2020. Berry and Nguyen were extradited in connection with a superseding indictment in the District of North Dakota charging them with conspiracy to distribute controlled substances and controlled substance analogues resulting in serious bodily injury and death, and conspiracy to import controlled substances and controlled substance analogues into the United States resulting in serious bodily injury and death. The superseding indictment also charges Nguyen with international money laundering conspiracy.

The extradition comes as part of "Operation Denial," an Organized Crime and Drug Enforcement Task Force (OCDETF)-funded investigation into the international trafficking of fentanyl and other lethal drugs, aided by the national and international coordination led by the multi-agency Special Operations Division near Washington D.C. as part of "Operation Deadly Merchant." The investigation started in North Dakota on Jan. 3, 2015, with the overdose death in Grand Forks, North Dakota, of 18-year-old Bailey Henke.

Berry and Nguyen's alleged co-conspirator Daniel Vivas Ceron of Columbia was previously extradited from Panama to North Dakota in 2017. Vivas Ceron pleaded guilty on July 12, 2019, for his role in operating an international fentanyl trafficking organization from a Canadian prison and is awaiting sentencing.

This case is being investigated by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement's Homeland Security Investigations, the Drug Enforcement Administration, U.S. Postal Inspection Service, Grand Forks Narcotics Task Force, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Portland Oregon Police Bureau – Drugs and Vice Division, Portland HIDTA Interdiction Task Force, Oregon State Police, and the Grand Forks Police Department. The Justice Department's Office of International Affairs provided significant assistance in bringing Berry and Nguyen to the United States and procuring foreign evidence during the investigation.

Trial Attorney Kaitlin Sahni of the Criminal Division's Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section, Assistant U.S. Attorney Christopher C. Myers of the District of North Dakota, and Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Edmonds of the District of Oregon are prosecuting the cases.

An indictment is merely an allegation. A defendant is presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in a court of law.

The Honorable David L. Bernhardt
Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
1849 C Street, NW
Washington, DC 20240

Dear Secretary Bernhardt:

America was saddened last Wednesday by the insurrection on the United States Capitol and the impending threats to our democracy. In light of recent events and imminent threats, I am requesting that any and all Public Gathering Permits in the District of Columbia during the period January 11 through January 24, 2021, be rescinded immediately and that no further permits be issued for this period.

Washington, DC has always proudly hosted Inauguration activities, welcoming hundreds of thousands of persons to the city, supporters and protestors alike. But this is not an ordinary January. We are under two separate states of emergency, one relating to the violence and terrorism associated with disputing the results of the election, and one relating to the pandemic that has claimed the lives of 371,000 Americans.

Protecting visitors requires not only the resources of our law enforcement officials, but requires us to call on the mutual aid of other law enforcement departments from other jurisdictions. The larger the crowds, the more people we need, and those persons, like persons coming for the Inauguration events, may be asymptomatic spreaders of the virus.

Dr. Christopher Rodriguez, Director of DC Homeland Security and Emergency Management Agency, is my point person on this request and is available to provide you with any additional information. He can be reached at 202-515-6056 or chris.rodriguez@dc.gov. Thank you for your immediate attention and reply.

Sincerely,

Muriel Bowser
Mayor

The Honorable Chad F. Wolf
Acting Secretary
United States Department of Homeland Security
Washington, DC 20528

Dear Acting Secretary Wolf:

Following the unprecedented terrorist attack on the United States Capitol on Wednesday, January 6, 2021, and the continued threat of related violence in the District of Columbia, we are extremely concerned about the upcoming National Special Security Event (NSSE) led by the United States Secret Service. We believe strongly that the 59th Presidential Inauguration on January 20 will require a very different approach than previous inaugurations given the chaos, injury, and death experienced at the United States Capitol during the insurrection. While I will be reaching out to a broad range of local, regional, and federal partners to enhance cooperation among our bodies, I strongly urge the United States Department of Homeland Security to adjust its approach to the Inauguration in several specific ways.

First, the District of Columbia is requesting the Department extend the National Special Security Event period to run from Monday, January 11 to Sunday, January 24, 2021. This is an increase from the current period of January 19 to January 21, 2021, which will allow for better Federal and District government interagency preparation for the Inauguration, given the new threats from insurgent acts of domestic terrorists. Further, the District strongly recommends that you secure the permission of the Congress of the United States to include the Capitol and its grounds in the NSSE perimeter.

Second, the District of Columbia is submitting a request for a pre-disaster declaration under the Robert T. Stafford Act for the Inauguration. This declaration will enhance and expedite direct federal assistance needed to prepare for the Inauguration. My Administration is developing specific requests for direct federal assistance and will work with FEMA to execute those requests upon approval of the declaration.

Third, the District of Columbia urges the Department to coordinate with the Department of Defense and the Department of Justice, the United States Congress, and the United States Supreme Court to establish a security and federal force deployment plan for all federal property, which will ensure the Metropolitan Police Department's (MPD) ability to focus on its local mission in the District's eight wards. Earlier this week, MPD officers acted heroically rushing to back-up the United States

Capitol Police to stop the assault on the United States Capitol. Consistent with established protocols and practices, it is the primary responsibility of the federal government to secure federal property in these situations.

In addition, I ask that the Acting Attorney General at the Department of Justice direct the Federal Bureau of Investigation to provide an intelligence and threat briefing on a daily basis during the period of January 11 – 24, 2021, to the DC Homeland Security and Emergency Management Agency (HSEMA) and MPD and all law enforcement entities operating in the District of Columbia.

Further, I am requesting that the Secretary of the Department of Interior cancel any and all Public Gathering Permits in the District of Columbia and deny any applications for Public Gathering Permits during the period of January 11 – 24, 2021. We have made this request repeatedly since June 2020 because of the COVID-19 pandemic, and this week demonstrated the National Park Service's willingness to approve last minute permits and major adjustments.

The requests outlined herein — if issued swiftly and communicated broadly — are essential to demonstrating our collective resolve in ensuring the Constitutional transition of power and our nation's capital in the days leading up to it. And like with previous inaugurations and NSSEs, the District of Columbia will host a press event for agencies engaged in the NSSE to brief the public on the plan and coordination among our agencies. We look forward to federal participation.

Dr. Christopher Rodriguez, Director of HSEMA, is my point person on this request and is available to provide you with any additional information. He can be reached at 202-515-6056 or chris.rodriguez@dc.gov. Thank you for your immediate attention and reply to these requests.

Sincerely,

Muriel Bowser
Mayor

‘The storm is here’: Ashli Babbitt’s journey from capital ‘guardian’ to invader

By Peter Jamison, Hannah Natanson, John Woodrow Cox and Alex Horton

Jan. 9, 2021 at 7:00 a.m. EST

The politician she revered above all others had lost an election. She’d struggled with crippling amounts of debt. Her home state of California was locking down again because of a virus she believed was fiction.

As she walked east along the Mall on Wednesday, wearing a backpack emblazoned with the American flag, Ashli Babbitt was elated.

“It was amazing to get to see the president talk,” Babbitt said, beaming in a video she streamed on Facebook early Wednesday afternoon that was later published by TMZ. “We are now walking down the inaugural path to the Capitol building. Three million-plus people.”

There was no crowd of three million: just a mob, lawless and maskless, that numbered in the thousands. Babbitt’s mission, which she had repeatedly avowed on social media, was to restore American democracy. But she was about to take part in a riot that would go down in history as one of that democracy’s most grievous attacks.

After a long but undistinguished military career and years of personal travails, Babbitt — a 35-year-old Air Force veteran from Southern California who once supported Barack Obama — believed she had found a cause that gave her life purpose. Within hours, that cause would bring her life to a violent end.

Hers was the first death reported Jan. 6, when rioters incited by President Trump overran the seat of the U.S. government. In the coming days there would be others. Brian D. Sicknick, a 42-year-old Capitol police officer who died after being injured while trying to push back the mob. Rosanne Boyland, Kevin D. Greeson and Benjamin Phillips, who died of medical emergencies during the chaos.

But it was Babbitt, fatally shot by police as she attempted to leap through the broken window of a door inside the Capitol, whose name would almost instantly become synonymous with the feverish movement that had propelled thousands of Americans to desecrate a pillar of their government.

Her comrades in that movement now call her a martyr and plan to gather at the Washington Monument Saturday to hold a vigil in her name.

Babbitt’s journey — illuminated through her extensive social media activity, court and military records, and interviews with some who knew her — was one of paranoid devotion and enthusiasm that only increased as Trump’s fortunes waned.

She avidly followed the QAnon conspiracy theory, convinced that Trump was destined to vanquish a cabal of child abusers and Satan-worshiping Democrats. She believed Wednesday would be “the storm,” when QAnon mythology holds that Trump would capture and execute his opponents.

Long before she embraced those ideas, Babbitt was on a rocky path. She was loyal but rebellious, devoted to her country but often unable to get along with those who shared it. A believer in American pluck and free enterprise, she struggled in her attempts to run a small pool-service company outside San Diego.

She served more than a decade in the armed forces but chafed under the military hierarchy. Six of those years were spent in an Air National Guard unit whose mandate is to defend the Washington region and respond to civil unrest. Its nickname: the Capital Guardians.

Like so many others, she believed Jan. 6 would be not a day of infamy, but an end to her troubles.

“Nothing will stop us,” she tweeted Jan. 5. “They can try and try and try but the storm is here and it is descending upon DC in less than 24 hours….dark to light!”

It was the last thing she would write.

‘Absolutely unafraid’

She was fed up with her executive officer. It was 2014, and Babbitt — along with much of her Air National Guard unit, then stationed at the Al Dhafra Air Base in the United Arab Emirates — detested him, according to a former staff sergeant in the unit who spoke on the condition of anonymity because he fears backlash online.

But despite her reputation for being outspoken, she kept herself in check. Then one day, the executive officer slipped new papers into a briefing binder shortly before quizzing service members on its contents.

Babbitt asked for permission to speak freely, the former staff sergeant said, and the executive officer granted it — “which was a huge mistake for that captain.”

For the next several minutes, she “let him have it,” the former staff sergeant said. He and other members of the unit watched, riveted, as Babbitt shouted and gesticulated, warning that the officer — who far outranked her — was sapping morale. Another former airman who served with Babbitt said he also witnessed the interaction.

“She was like a dog with a bone,” the former staff sergeant said. “She could never let go of whatever her attention was on, and she was absolutely unafraid of anything.”

Babbitt, who grew up in a small town in the foothills of Southern California’s Cuyamaca Mountains, left similarly strong impressions on others who crossed her path. She was a fast talker, whipping through sentences “like a chinchilla that had just done a line of cocaine,” the staff sergeant said. She escaped punishment for confronting the officer in 2014, according to the airmen who served with her, but it was not the only time that her personality put her at odds with the culture and rules of the military.

She deployed at least seven times, an Air Force journalist wrote in 2014, and relished the opportunity to mentor newer airmen. But discipline issues and insubordination stunted her career, said two former airmen who served with her. She was demoted at least once, they said.

Babbitt left the military in 2016 as a senior airman — a relatively low rank for someone who spent more than a decade in uniform.

The same year, Babbitt spotted her husband Aaron Babbitt's ex, Celeste Norris, pulling out of a shopping center parking lot in southern Maryland, according to a court petition for a protective order Norris later filed. Babbitt spun her white SUV in a U-turn and began chasing Norris, according to the petition, eventually rear-ending the other woman's car three times and forcing her to stop.

Babbitt then exited her own car "screaming at me and verbally threatening me," wrote Norris, who declined to comment for this report. Norris filed a second protective order petition in early 2017, saying Babbitt had followed her home from work and called her "all hours of day and night."

Some who served with Babbitt kept in touch with her, remembering how fiercely she defended people she cared for. At one point in her life, that meant other service members.

But within a few years of leaving the military, "she had a new cause," one of her fellow airmen said. "And her cause was QAnon."

'Today we save America'

Babbitt would eventually share more than 8,600 tweets, offering a vivid account of her descent into a world of conspiracy theories and delusion, but her first message was addressed to Trump, the man she believed was destined to rescue her country.

"#love," she wrote Oct. 31, 2016, beside his name and above a photo of three signs nailed to a tree: "Make America Great Again," "H FOR PRISON" and "CHRISTIAN DEPLORABLES LIVE HERE."

A week later, on Election Day, she wrote to Trump again: "today we save America from the tyranny, collusion and corruption." When he won, Babbitt cried.

She was an avid viewer of Fox News, praising Tucker Carlson and other far-right media personalities on the network as she derided their liberal targets. A registered Libertarian, she hadn't always despised Democrats, declaring at least three times in recent years that she voted for Obama.

"I think Obama did great things…I think he jacked some s--- up," she wrote in November 2018, "but I think he did do a lot of good…at a time where we needed him."

But the man we needed now and for years to come, she had decided, was Trump, and her devotion only grew as she became more obsessed with baseless online propaganda — all while her professional life collapsed.

On July 1, 2019, a judge issued a $71,000 judgment against her pool business because she had apparently failed to repay a loan. The day before, Babbitt had suggested starting a GoFundMe to pay for Trump's addition to Mount Rushmore, and the day after, she lodged an angry tirade at U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.).

"You are losing it," Babbitt wrote, "seriously."

She promoted far-right lies that Hillary Clinton has kidnapped children and described the left as modern-day enslavers. She appeared to use a QAnon hashtag for the first time early last year, parroting the cryptic jargon promoted by its most ardent followers.

“The best is yet to come,” she wrote Feb. 24.

“What is dark will come to light!” she added a month later.

“We have to #SaveTheChildren,” she demanded in one post, using a humanitarian hashtag that conspiracy theorists hijacked to promote their claim that a secretive group of elites run a pedophilia ring.

Her anger appeared to intensify amid the pandemic, which she insisted was a hoax, calling it the “controla virus” and “a F---ING JOKE.”

“We are being hoodwinked,” she wrote in July. “The sheep need to wake up.”

On Dec. 29, eight days before her death, she discovered a tweet from Vice President-elect Kamala D. Harris promising to distribute more vaccines, promote mask-wearing and get students back to school.

“No the f--- you will not!” Babbitt retorted.

In the days leading up to her trip to Washington for the Trump demonstration, however, her online fury receded, replaced with glee and a new sense of mission. She retweeted dozens of figures promoting Trump’s demands that his supporters gather to overturn the election, including Trump supporter Jack Posobiec, QAnon activists, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Donald Trump Jr.

“I will be there tomorrow!” she wrote Jan. 4 in response to another supporter heading to the nation’s capital. “Gods speed!”

She boarded a plane in San Diego the next morning and sat beside Will Carless, a journalist from USA Today who would later film the moment just before the pro-Trump rioters stormed the Capitol. He called her “gregarious and chatty” and said they talked about a California beach town each of them loved.

The next day, it was overcast and cold in the District. Babbitt dressed in a hooded jacket and put an American flag backpack on her shoulders. She listened to the president tell her and many others that the country could only be taken back with strength, not weakness. Then she marched to the Capitol, surrounded, she said in her final Facebook video, by fellow “patriots.”

“She loved her country, and she was doing what she thought was right to support her country, joining up with like-minded people that also love their president and their country,” her husband told Fox-5 San Diego.

Not long after 2 p.m., he said, he sent her a message to ask how she was doing. She never wrote back.

A truth affirmed

While her husband was waiting, Babbitt was with the mob that swarmed the lightly staffed barricades surrounding their national legislature. In a scene unlike any in American history, they bashed in the windows of the U.S. Capitol. They fought with the police, screaming and waving Trump campaign flags and Confederate battle flags. They wandered through the halls and chambers of the Capitol as panicked lawmakers sheltered in place or were evacuated. Tear gas canisters were discharged in the Rotunda.

And a gun was fired.

It is unclear exactly how and when Babbitt entered the Capitol. She undoubtedly understood law enforcement could use deadly force in response to the breach. Airmen in the role Babbitt once occupied in the D.C. Air National Guard's 113th Air Wing receive riot-control training, and her former unit was mobilized to protect the Capitol on Wednesday.

But it has since become clear what happened inside: The raging crowd that bashed in the windows of a barricaded door to the Speaker's Lobby, with a short tanned woman in an American backpack at the front of its ranks. Her attempt to climb through one of those windows, leading the way, despite a Capitol Police officer pointing a handgun in her direction. The abrupt way she toppled backward after a single shot resounded.

And it was clear how she left.

At about 3 p.m., a team of paramedics rushed a gurney to an ambulance parked at the southeast corner of the building. On it was Babbitt, staring listlessly in the direction of the building she had just tried to occupy, the place where her dreams of a revitalizing "storm" were supposed to come true.

Blood ran from her nose and covered half of her face. Her eyes were on the verge of closing. Riot police guarded the ambulance as its doors closed and pulled away. And that night — the night Babbitt died far from her home and family — Congress affirmed as true what she had died denying: Donald Trump would not remain president.

IMMEDIATE RELEASE

USSF Becomes 18th Member of Intel Community

JAN. 8, 2021

Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe today welcomed the U.S. Space Force (USSF) as the 18th member of the U.S. Intelligence Community (IC).

During an afternoon ceremony, Ratcliffe and Chief of Space Operations Gen. John W. "Jay" Raymond announced the designation of the intelligence element of the U.S. Space Force as a member of the IC.

"This accession reaffirms our commitment to securing outer space as a safe and free domain for America's interests," said Ratcliffe. "American power in space is stronger and more unified than ever before. Today we welcome Space Force to the Intelligence Community and look forward to the power and ingenuity of a space security team unrivaled by any nation."

The Space Force element is the first new organization to join the IC since 2006.

"Today, we took action to elevate space intelligence missions, tradecraft, and collaboration to ensure the success of the Space Force, the Intelligence Community, and ultimately our National Security," said Gen. Raymond. "This is a significant milestone, a clear statement that America is committed to a secure and accessible space domain. Our partnership will ensure the Space Force and the Nation remain always above any threat."

Ratcliffe highlighted how the addition of USSF to the IC marks a historic opportunity to further strategic change across the national security space enterprise.

"Through sharing space-related information and intelligence, the IC and DoD increase integration and coordination of our intelligence activities to achieve best effect and value in executing our missions," said Ratcliffe. "This move not only underscores the importance of space as a priority intelligence and military operational domain for national security, but ensures interoperability, future capability development and operations, and true global awareness for strategic warning."

"Today's change aligns our newest service with the other members of the Defense Intelligence Enterprise and will help ensure our efforts are coordinated and synchronized across all domains of warfare," said Ezra Cohen, acting Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence and Security.

With the USSF addition, nine DoD components are members of the Intelligence Community.

Thirteen Charged in Federal Court Following Riot at the United States Capitol

Approximately 40 charged in Superior Court

Thirteen individuals have been charged so far in federal court in the District of Columbia related to crimes committed at the U.S. Capitol in Washington, D.C, on Wednesday, Jan. 6, 2021. In addition to those who have been charged, additional complaints have been submitted and investigations are ongoing.

"The lawless destruction of the U.S. Capitol building was an attack against one of our Nation's greatest institutions," said Acting U.S. Attorney Michael Sherwin. "My Office, along with our law enforcement partners at all levels, have been expeditiously working and leveraging every resource to identify, arrest, and begin prosecuting these individuals who took part in the brazen criminal acts at the U.S. Capitol. We are resolute in our commitment to holding accountable anyone responsible for these disgraceful criminal acts, and to anyone who might be considering engaging in or inciting violence in the coming weeks – know this: you will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

"ATF is committed to the rule of law and the protection of all citizens' Constitutional rights," said Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) Deputy Director Regina Lombardo. "We continue to support our law enforcement partners to ensure those who violated the law during the events at the Capitol this week are brought to justice. ATF has dedicated all appropriate resources to complete these investigations as soon as possible."

"Today's charges are just the beginning of the FBI's ongoing efforts to hold those responsible for the criminal acts of violence and destruction that unfolded during the U.S. Capitol building breach on January 6th," said FBI Director Christopher Wray. "To be clear, what took place that day was not First Amendment-protected activity, but rather an affront on our democracy. The FBI, along with our local, state and federal partners, is committed to ensuring that justice is served. We will continue to aggressively investigate each and every individual who chose to ignore the law and instead incite violence, destroy property, and injure others."

"Deputy U.S. Marshals responded to support U.S. Capitol Police after the incursion into the Capitol building. Our deputies helped to clear the building and escorted members of Congress back to the main chamber for official business," said U.S. Marshals Service Director Donald Washington. "US Marshals will now bring to bear our fugitive investigations expertise to ensure that individuals charged in federal warrants are brought to face justice. Respect for the rule of law is a foundational principle for our democracy and the freedoms that it provides. Unlawful acts will not go unpunished."

"The events that happened at and around the United States Capitol were unconscionable, and those responsible will be held accountable for their attempts to thwart Democracy," said Metropolitan Police Department Chief of Police Robert J. Contee III. "While these charges represent a positive step, there is still work to be done. Our collective intentions are to work diligently to identify all of the persons responsible for the insurrection at our U.S. Capitol."

Thirteen individuals have been charged with federal crimes. The defendants and charges are outlined below:

1. Cleveland Meredith was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with making interstate threats to Speaker Nancy Pelosi.
2. Richard Barnett, of Arkansas, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful entry; violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and theft of public money, property, or records. Barnett allegedly entered a restricted are of the Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi.
3. Lonnie Coffman, of Alabama, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with possession of an unregistered firearm (destructive device) and carrying a pistol without a license. It is alleged that Coffman's vehicle contained 11 explosive devices known as Molotov cocktails and firearms. It is further alleged he was in possession of two firearms. Coffman was arrested and is currently being held. His detention hearing is scheduled for Jan. 12, 2021.
4. Mark Leffingwell, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; assault on a federal law enforcement officer; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds. Leffingwell allegedly entered the Senate side of the Capitol and when stopped by law enforcement, struck an officer in the helmet and chest. Leffingwell is currently being held and has a detention hearing in district court today.
5. Christopher Alberts, of Maryland, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with carrying or having readily accessible, on the grounds of the United States Capitol Building, a firearm and ammunition. Specifically a Taurus G2C, 9mm handgun and 9mm caliber ammunition. The defendant appeared in district court and was released. He has a preliminary hearing scheduled for Jan. 28, 2021.
6. Joshua Pruitt, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority. The defendant appeared in district court and was released. He has a preliminary hearing scheduled for Jan. 28, 2021.
7. Matthew Council, of Florida, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds. Council allegedly unlawfully entered the Capitol building, and when stopped by law enforcement, he pushed the officer.
8. Cindy Fitchett, of Virginia, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.
9. Michael Curzio, of Florida, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.
10. Douglas Sweet, of Florida, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.
11. Bradley Ruskelas, of Illinois, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.
12. Terry Brown, of Pennsylvania, was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.
13. Thomas Gallagher was charged on Jan. 7, 2021, with knowingly entering or remaining in any restricted building or grounds without lawful authority; or knowingly, with intent to impede government business or official functions, engaging in disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds; and violent entry and disorderly conduct on Capitol grounds.

In addition, approximately 40 individuals have been arrested and charged in Superior Court with offenses including, but not limited to, unlawful entry, curfew violations, and firearms-related crimes.

The cases are being prosecuted by the U.S Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia and are being investigated jointly by the FBI; U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives; United States Marshals Service; U.S. Capitol Police Department; and the Metropolitan Police Department.

The ATF and FBI continue to urge the public to report suspected use of explosive devices, or violent, destructive acts associated with the recent unrest. Anyone with information can call 1-888-ATF-TIPS (1-888-283-8477), email ATFTips@atf.gov or submit information anonymously via ReportIt.com .

The FBI is looking for individuals who may have incited or promoted violence of any kind. Anyone with digital material or tips can call 1-800-CALL-FBI (800-225-5324) or submit images or videos at fbi.gov/USCapitol.

The details contained in the charging documents are allegations. Defendants are presumed innocent unless and until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in a court of law.

Man caught in Madrid airport smuggling cocaine into Spain in his wheelchair

The National Police stopped a 55-year-old Spanish man in Madrid's Barajas airport after he landed on a flight from the Dominican Republic on Sunday night, January 3. Police had been carrying out routine surveillance when they noticed the man, who was being helped to the airport's disability area in a wheelchair, appeared nervous and agitated.

His luggage was searched, and among his belongings was a folded-up electric wheelchair with a hidden compartment on both the backrest and seat. According to the higher Headquarters of the National Police, ten packages containing almost 10 kilograms of cocaine were discovered in the wheelchair.
According to police sources, the man had booked an internal flight to Malaga in the hope that his checked luggage wouldn't be subject to scrutiny. The National Police have confirmed that the man has a long criminal history for fraud, irregular immigration and falsifying documents and was immediately remanded in custody.

USA– Airlines boost staffing and security after assault on Capitol– 8 January 2021

Major U.S. airlines are increasing staffing and security at airports in and out of the Washington, D.C., area after yesterday's assault on Capitol Building. The violence also prompted an appeal from the nation's biggest flight attendants union.

Carriers including American Airlines and United Airlines said they were taking measures to avoid potential trouble on the ground and in the air after thousands of supporters of President Donald Trump demanding the presidential election be overturned stormed the Capitol building on Wednesday.

The riot was preceded by at least two in-flight incidents on D.C.-bound flights. One involved Senator Mitt Romney, R.-Utah, who was reportedly heckled by a group of Trump supporters on a flight from Salt Lake City on Tuesday.

Romney, a vocal critic of the plan by some GOP lawmakers to formally object to the election results, was also subjected to a tirade by a woman at Salt Lake International Airport who refused to put on a face mask. A video of the confrontation was posted on Facebook. Another in-flight disruption captured on video occurred on an American flight earlier this week from Texas to Washington, D.C., with passengers screaming at each other after one person projected a "Trump 2020" image onto the aircraft's ceiling.

"The mob mentality behavior that took place on several flights to the D.C. area [Tuesday] was unacceptable and threatened the safety and security of every single person onboard," stated Sara Nelson, president of the Association of Flight Attendants, which represents nearly 50,000 flight attendants at 17 airlines. The AFA called for airlines and transportation authorities to make clear that bad behavior wouldn't be tolerated and that unruly travelers would be barred from boarding planes.

Some airline passengers took part in the violence at the Capitol, creating "further concern about their departure from the D.C. area, Nelson said. "Acts against our democracy, our government, and the freedom we claim as Americans must disqualify these individuals from the freedom of flight."

The Federal Aviation Administration on Thursday warned that disruptive acts on airplanes could violate federal law, noting that violators face possible imprisonment and fines of up to $35,000. "We echo the sentiments of AFA that our first priority must be the safety and security of our passengers and crew," United stated in an email to CBS MoneyWatch. "Since earlier this week our crews have been moved from downtown D.C. hotels. Additionally, we have increased staffing at Washington-area airports and are in close contact with appropriate law enforcement agencies."

American also said it was working with local law enforcement and its airport authority partners to ensure safety on the ground and in the air. "We also have increased staffing at Washington D.C.-area airports and will not serve alcohol on flights to and from this area as a precautionary measure," a spokesperson stated in an email. Delta Air Lines works with law enforcement agencies and others to "enact methods — both seen and unseen — as part of our unwavering efforts to keep everyone safe at our airports and on our flights," a spokesperson said by email.

"We expect our people and customers to treat one another with dignity and respect," the spokesperson added.

CISA updates guidance on SolarWinds hack remediation, calls for upgrades and increased reporting < Caution-https://insidecybersecurity.com/daily-news/cisa-updates-guidance-solarwinds-hack-remediation-calls-upgrades-and-increased-reporting > (01/07) Inside Cybersecurity
The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency has updated guidance on responding to the hack of SolarWinds Orion software management tools on federal networks, including forensic analysis and reporting requirements for agencies still struggling to understand the scope of an attack that affected government as well as private-sector critical infrastructure systems. “Federal agencies without evidence of adversary follow-on activity on their networks that accept the risk of running SolarWinds Orion in their enterprises should rebuild or upgrade, in compliance with hardening steps outlined in the Supplemental Guidance, to at least SolarWinds Orion Platform version 2020.2.1 HF2,” according to the update.

CISA: Hackers access to federal networks without SolarWinds < Caution-https://fcw.com/articles/2021/01/07/cisa-usg-hack-new-vector.aspx > (01/07) FCW
The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency says it has evidence that hackers are breaching the federal government's networks by other paths than the recently discovered vulnerabilities in SolarWinds Orion."Specifically, we are investigating incidents in which activity indicating abuse of Security Assertion Markup Language (SAML) tokens consistent with this adversary's behavior is present, yet where impacted SolarWinds instances have not been identified," according to updated guidance published Wednesday. "CISA is continuing to work to confirm initial access vectors and identify any changes to the tactics, techniques, and procedures (TTPs)."

In the aftermath of Wednesday’s intrusion at the U.S. Capitol, federal authorities are contending with cybersecurity risks created by rioters roaming freely through congressional offices with unsecured computers.While there is no indication that hacking into computer networks was a goal of the rioters, at least one laptop was reported missing and the potential exists that the intruders gained access to sensitive systems when members of Congress and their staff hastily took cover, according to cybersecurity experts. As a result, both the House and the Senate should devote resources to mitigating any potential vulnerabilities, they said.

CISA Issues Updated Remediation Guidance to Feds for SolarWinds Hack < Caution-https://www.meritalk.com/articles/cisa-issues-updated-remediation-guidance-to-feds-for-solarwinds-hack/ > (01/07) Meritalk

The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) released a new round of supplemental guidance on Jan. 6 to the emergency directive that the agency issued on Dec. 13, 2020, providing remediation guidance in response to the Russia-backed hack of more than 18,000 government and private sector systems via SolarWinds Orion products. The guidance update "requires (1) agencies that ran affected versions conduct forensic analysis, (2) agencies that accept the risk of running SolarWinds Orion comply with certain hardening requirements, and (3) reporting by agency from department-level Chief Information Officers (CIOs) by Tuesday, January 19, and Monday, January 25, 2020."

The US Cybersecurity & Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) has updated its Emergency Directive concerning the SolarWinds Orion Compromise. The Directive provides guidance for Federal agencies but is also relevant for critical infrastructure entities and other private sector organizations. Titled Emergency Directive (ED) 21-01 Supplemental Guidance version 3: Mitigate SolarWinds Orion Code Compromise the guidance supersedes Required Action 4 of ED 21-01 and Supplemental Guidance versions 1 and 2 and confirms that SolarWinds Orion Platform version 2020.2.1 HF2 has been examined by the National Security Agency and has been verified to eliminate the previously identified malicious code. This version also includes updates to fix un-related vulnerabilities, including vulnerabilities that SolarWinds has publicly disclosed.

National Security Council launches task force to investigate Solar Winds cyberattack < Caution-https://homelandprepnews.com/stories/59941-national-security-council-launches-task-force-to-investigate-solar-winds-cyber-attack/ > (01/07) Homeland Preparedness News

The National Security Council staff has launched a task force to coordinate the investigation and remediation of the recent Solar Winds cyberattack involving federal government networks. The task force — called the Cyber Unified Coordination Group (UCG) — is composed of representatives from the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), and the National Security Agency (NSA).

How quickly do I need a second COVID-19 vaccine shot? < Caution-https://apnews.com/article/how-fast-second-coronavirus-vaccine-shot-6ec3e81fe1c9c3a41afdd62decf59496 > (01/07) The Associated Press

How quickly do I need a second COVID-19 vaccine shot? The first COVID-19 vaccines in the U.S. require two doses a few weeks apart. People should get some degree of protection within two weeks of the first shot, with the second shot bringing about the vaccine's full protection. For the vaccine by Pfizer and Germany's BioNTech, the second shot is supposed to be after three weeks. For Moderna, it's four weeks. But how closely those guidelines should be followed has been a point of difference for the United States and the United Kingdom, which has been rolling out the Pfizer vaccine and one by Astrazeneca that requires two doses given four weeks apart.

CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE

DC protests: How a mob of rioters took the Capitol building by storm < Caution-https://nypost.com/2021/01/07/dc-protests-how-a-mob-of-rioters-took-the-capitol-by-storm/ > (01/07) New York Post

The fervent protests surrounding the 2020 US election reached an ugly head Wednesday afternoon — but it had been steadily brewing for weeks and its implications could last for years. The prospect of a huge gathering in Washington, D.C., was first revealed by President Trump as far back as Dec. 19, as he continued to deny losing the election to Joe Biden. “Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!” he tweeted of the protest to mark the day Biden’s win would be certified. So, after weeks of hype, by 6 a.m. Wednesday thousands had already gathered around the Capitol for what was touted as the “Save America Rally.”

President-Elect Joe Biden and Vice President-Elect Kamala Harris will be inaugurated on Jan. 20, 2021, ushering in a new set of regulatory and legislative priorities during the next four years. Chief among the Biden Administration's priorities will be responding to the coronavirus pandemic, which could involve an infrastructure package to stimulate the economy and that is ripe for the inclusion of cybersecurity-related reforms. However, passing legislation in the 117th Congress – in which Democrats will likely hold slim majorities in the House and Senate – will require bipartisan support.

WASHINGTON—The electronic filing system used by federal courts has likely been compromised in the massive SolarWinds hack, federal judiciary officials said, extending to another branch of government the impact of a suspected Russian cyber-espionage campaign that has breached more than half a dozen Trump administration agencies. The federal judiciary was working to immediately add new security procedures to protect “highly sensitive confidential documents filed with the courts,” according to a statement Wednesday by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

CISA updates guidance on SolarWinds compromise < Caution-https://www.fedscoop.com/solarwinds-guidance-update-cisa/ > (01/07) FedScoop

Federal agencies that ran compromised SolarWinds Orion software must conduct a forensic analysis by the end of the month, according to new supplemental guidance from the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency released Wednesday. That analysis must look at system memory, host storage, network and third-party environments such as cloud services. Agencies must also hunt for indicators of compromise or “other evidence of threat actor activity” and create or update a CISA incident report accordingly.

CISA: SolarWinds Hackers Got Into Networks by Guessing Passwords < Caution-https://www.nextgov.com/cybersecurity/2021/01/cisa-solarwinds-hackers-got-networks-guessing-passwords/171265/ > (01/07) Nextgov

Perpetrators of a widespread, intelligence-gathering campaign used common hacker techniques to get through passwords in addition to more sophisticated methods, according to an update to the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency’s alert. “CISA incident response investigations have identified that initial access in some cases was obtained by password guessing, password spraying, and inappropriately secured administrative credentials accessible via external remote access services,” reads the activity alert updated Wednesday. CISA notes that the activity alert does not in any way supersede its emergency directive and is not formal guidance but the document provides additional context for remediation efforts.

Federal courts are latest apparent victim of SolarWinds hack < Caution-https://www.cyberscoop.com/solarwinds-hack-us-courts/ > (01/07)CyberScoop

The federal judiciary's electronic case management and filing system suffered "an apparent compromise" as part of the SolarWinds breach, according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. The office is still assessing the impact, but a representative says the organization has stepped up security precautions in the meantime. "The federal Judiciary's foremost concern must be the integrity of and public trust in the operation and administration of its courts," James Duff, secretary of the judiciary's national policy-making body — the Judicial Conference of the United States — said in a Wednesday communication to the courts.

Further Fall-Out from Russian Hacking of SolarWinds < Caution-https://www.natlawreview.com/article/further-fall-out-russian-hacking-solarwinds > (01/07)The National Law Review
U.S. intelligence agencies, including the FBI, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, the National Security Agency and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, have confirmed that Russia was behind the SolarWinds hack. It is reported that the FBI is investigating whether Russia hacked into project management software JetBrains' TeamCity DevOps tool to originally plant its malware in SolarWinds Orion, causing a cascade of downstream opportunities for Russia to access numerous governmental agencies' systems, as well as thousands of private company systems

SolarWinds Hackers Compromise Confidential Court Filings < Caution-https://www.crn.com/news/security/solarwinds-hackers-compromise-confidential-court-filings > (01/07)CRN
The Russian hackers behind the SolarWinds attack have apparently compromised the federal courts' electronic case filing system, putting "highly sensitive non-public documents" at great risk. An apparent compromise of the confidentiality of the federal case filing system due to vulnerabilities associated with SolarWinds Orion is currently under investigation, the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts (AO) disclosed Wednesday. The AO said it's working with the Department of Homeland Security on a security audit relating to Orion vulnerabilities that put sealed filings at great risk of compromise.

U.S. Justice Department also a victim of SolarWinds Orion compromise < Caution-https://www.itworldcanada.com/article/u-s-justice-department-also-a-victim-of-solarwinds-orion-compromise/440350 > (01/07)IT World Canada
The U.S. Department of Justice has joined the list of federal departments that have been victimized by a vulnerability in SolarWinds Orion network management platform. "On Dec. 24, 2020, the Department of Justice's Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO) learned of previously unknown malicious activity linked to the global SolarWinds incident that has affected multiple federal agencies and technology contractors, among others." the department said in a statement. "This activity involved access to the Department's Microsoft O365 email environment.

CYBERSECURITY

People, processes, and tech: 2021's top cybersecurity priorities < Caution-https://www.securitymagazine.com/articles/94296-people-processes-and-tech-2021s-top-cybersecurity-priorities > (01/07) Security Magazine
2020 has been tough on every business. Organizations are used to stretching their budgets to fit their security and operational needs, but the pandemic upped the ante by throwing in an immediate shift to remote work that required support. As chaotic as 2020 sometimes felt, 2021 shouldn't be as disruptive as businesses settle into their next normal. For security teams, this means getting back to basics and effectively managing their people, processes, and technology.

The violent pro-Trump mob that stormed the Capitol on Wednesday exposed not only glaring weaknesses in the legislative body's physical security but also its digital and operational security, according to experts. The intruders were able to roam the halls of Congress and at certain points had unfettered access to some lawmakers' offices and computers. One rioter left a note in front of a computer in House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's office saying, "We will not back down." Sen. Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., said a laptop was stolen from his office.

New DOD policy reinforces 'foundational' role of cybersecurity in acquisitions < Caution-https://insidecybersecurity.com/daily-news/new-dod-policy-reinforces-foundational-role-cybersecurity-acquisitions > (01/07) Inside Cybersecurity
The Defense Department has issued a new instruction outlining how acquisition officials should approach incorporating cybersecurity requirements into Pentagon contracts, putting an emphasis on the need for effective supply chain risk management. The policy, "Cybersecurity For Acquisition Decision Authorities and Program Managers," signed by Pentagon acquisition chief Ellen Lord makes it clear that acquisition officials should know cybersecurity is critical to all aspects of defense acquisition.

Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) is calling out Republican colleagues including Sens. Josh Hawley (Mo.) and Ted Cruz (Texas) — though not by name — for challenging the results of the 2020 election in a way he says was misleading. "Some senators, for political gain, misled supporters about their ability to challenge the election results — some even sent out fundraising emails while insurrectionists stormed the Capitol. That stops now — Republicans ought to focus on countering the Democrats' radical agenda," Cotton tweeted on Thursday morning.

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump's Facebook and Instagram accounts will be locked through at least Inauguration Day, CEO Mark Zuckerberg announced Thursday. "We believe the risks of allowing the President to continue to use our service during this period are simply too great," Zuckerberg wrote in a statement posted to his personal page. "Therefore, we are extending the block we have placed on his Facebook and Instagram accounts indefinitely and for at least the next two weeks until the peaceful transition of power is complete."

The Defense Department has issued a new instruction outlining how acquisition officials should approach incorporating cybersecurity requirements into Pentagon contracts, putting an emphasis on the need for effective supply chain risk management. The policy, "Cybersecurity For Acquisition Decision Authorities and Program Managers," signed by Pentagon acquisition chief Ellen Lord makes it clear that acquisition officials should know cybersecurity is critical to all aspects of defense acquisition. The document states cybersecurity is "foundational to the Defense Acquisition System (DAS) and an intrinsic program manager (PM) responsibility when a program uses any acquisition pathway of the Adaptive Acquisition Framework (AAF)." The new framework, intended to streamline guidance for various types of defense acquisitions, was released last year.

Four Ways to Protect Against Supply Chain Infiltration < Caution-https://securityboulevard.com/2021/01/four-ways-to-protect-against-supply-chain-infiltration/ > (01/07) Security Boulevard

The far-reaching SolarWinds Orion attack has catapulted supply chain security vulnerabilities into the spotlight – particularly those involving the third-party software applications and hardware components that comprise much of today's enterprise IT environments. The attack, which potentially impacted more than 18,000 organizations to date, stems from a compromise of third-party network management vendor SolarWind's Orion software. A sophisticated threat actor reportedly distributed malicious source code within an Orion software update – leveraging the very means by which organizations protect themselves against potential threats. This allowed the attacker to gain a foothold into victim organizations, steal and abuse legitimate identities and credentials, escalate privileges and move laterally and vertically to access valuable assets – and then maintain persistent access using the Golden SAML technique, never seen before in the wild.

5G SECURITY

Huawei spin-off Honor working with Qualcomm on 5G smartphones, report says < Caution-https://subscriber.politicopro.com/article/2021/01/huawei-spin-off-honor-working-with-qualcomm-on-5g-smartphones-report-says-2027413 > (01/07) Politico Pro

Honor, the budget smartphone unit sold by Huawei Technologies Co. in November as part of its response to US blacklisting, is working with American chip supplier Qualcomm on 5G devices, according to Chinese media. A former consumer brand run by Huawei, Honor is expected to launch smartphones with Qualcomm 5G chipsets in May or June this year, local media Caixin reported on Wednesday. The agreement with Qualcomm was first reported by the state-backed China Securities Journal on Tuesday, citing a supplier to Honor. It said Honor 5G smartphones based on Qualcomm chipsets were already "in the research and development (R&D) process."

STOCKHOLM (Reuters) - Huawei has appealed against a court decision that allowed Swedish telecoms regulator PTS to resume 5G spectrum auctions when the Chinese telecom equipment maker is excluded from the country's 5G rollout. A Swedish court on Dec. 16 backed an appeal by PTS against a ruling to stop the auctions, but also said Huawei could pursue a legal challenge over its exclusion.

The US Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has sent a security alert warning private sector companies that the Egregor ransomware operation is actively targeting and extorting businesses worldwide. The FBI says in a TLP:WHITE Private Industry Notification (PIN) shared on Wednesday that Egregor claims to have already hit and compromised more than over 150 victims since the agency first observed this malicious activity in September 2020.

The operators of the Ryuk ransomware are believed to have earned more than $150 million worth of Bitcoin from ransom payments following intrusions at companies all over the world. In a joint report published today, threat intel company Advanced Intelligence and cybersecurity firm HYAS said they tracked payments to 61 Bitcoin addresses previously attributed and linked to Ryuk ransomware attacks. "Ryuk receives a significant amount of their ransom payments from a well-known broker that makes payments on behalf of the ransomware victims," the two companies said. "These payments sometimes amount to millions of dollars and typically run in the hundreds of thousands range."

911 service interrupted due to Frontier outage, police say < Caution-https://www.havasunews.com/free_access/911-service-interrupted-due-to-frontier-outage-police-say/article_aac33ba8-5115-11eb-91f3-1f8c16c1baa8.html > (01/07) Havasunews

Lake Havasu City officials reported that Frontier Communications phone service outage resulted in emergency dispatchers being unable to receive 911 calls Thursday morning. The announcement appeared to coincide with a spike in user complaints that occurred at about 9:15 a.m., according to internet service monitoring tool, Downdetector.com. At that time, Downdetector recorded 60 reported service issues. By 11 p.m., an additional 65 service issues were reported. The website also reported measurable spikes in service issues that took place Dec. 31 through Jan. 2.

COVID-19 Vaccine Distribution Physical Security Measures

COVID-19 vaccine distribution efforts are underway, and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) encourages organizations involved in the distribution process to assess potential security vulnerabilities and implement corresponding risk mitigation solutions to reduce the probability of disruptions. Although there are currently no credible or imminent threats, the distribution process could potentially be disrupted by anti-vaccination protesters, insiders, criminals or organized crime, or terrorists. As such, organizations involved in the manufacturing, transportation, and distribution of the vaccine should apply cost-effective protective measures to their operations. Vulnerability assessments, planning, and training are key steps to mitigating potential threats and identifying necessary protective measures. This infographic broadly illustrates four stages of vaccination distribution activity, possible physical threats at these stages, and some potential mitigations. For more hands-on assistance, please engage local law enforcement, or contact CISA Central.

DHS S&T's Master Question List for COVID-19 offers scientifically informed guidance for government decision-makers

The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Science and Technology Directorate (S&T) has aggregated a Master Question List for COVID-19, offering scientifically informed briefs in response to the most common public health questions about what is currently known about COVID-19, and what additional information is still needed. The information is intended for use by those with a non-medical, non-scientific background, but is also rigorously cited by the most current publicly available scientific studies. This resource will be useful to government decision-makers and anyone involved in the operational response to COVID-19.

The first iteration of the DHS S&T Master Question List (MQL) was released to the public on December 21, 2020. A selection of the questions discussed in the current version include:

- Transmissibility – How does it spread from one host to another? How easily is it spread?
- Incubation Period – How long after infection do symptoms appear? Are people infectious during this time?

DHS's Blue Campaign recognizes National Human Trafficking Awareness Day on January 11

National 911 Annual Report released

- Clinical Presentation – What are the signs and symptoms of an infected person?
- Protective Immunity – How long does the immune response provide protection from reinfection?
- Non-pharmaceutical Interventions (NPIs) – Are public health control measures effective at reducing spread?
- PPE – What PPE is effective, and who should be using it?
- Forecasting – What forecasting models and methods exist?

This document will be periodically updated with the latest information. Check back for future updates to the DHS S&T's Master Question List for COVID-19 webpage. For the latest public health information on COVID-19, consult the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

First Responder's Toolbox on VBIED Preparedness, Recognition and Response

The recent bombing in Nashville, Tennessee on Christmas morning was the result of an explosion reportedly detonated from a recreational vehicle parked in front of an AT&T building in downtown Nashville. Prompt action by local police to evacuate building occupants prior to the explosion prevented fatalities. The high potential for loss of life and property in these types of incidents highlights the importance of first responders' preparedness.

The Joint CT Assessment Team (JCAT) has developed a First Responder's Toolbox on Vehicle Borne Improvised Explosive Device (VBIED): Preparedness, Recognition, And Response. This is a comprehensive resource for first responders to increase VBIED awareness to aid in preparedness, recognition, and response. It includes:

- A historical overview of the ten VBIED incidents occurring on United States soil since 2010.
- Specific VBIED tactics, concerns and key safety considerations.
- Lists of pre-incident indicators observable on the vehicle itself, as well as other indicators and behaviors related to the vehicle.
- A 3D model of evacuation distances based on explosive capacity.
- Several checklists for use in standard operating

DHS's Blue Campaign recognizes National Human Trafficking Awareness Day on January 11

DHS's Blue Campaign is a national public awareness campaign, designed to educate the public, law enforcement and other industry partners to recognize the indicators of human trafficking, and how to appropriately respond to possible cases. The Blue Campaign works closely with DHS Components and leverages partnerships with the private sector, Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs), law enforcement, and state and local authorities to prevent human trafficking and protect exploited persons.

National Human Trafficking Awareness Day is recognized each year on January 11th. On this day, the Blue Campaign asks people to take photos of themselves and others wearing blue and to post these photos on social media using the hashtag #WearBlueDay.

In addition to promoting public awareness and engagement, the Blue Campaign also provides a robust set of resources and educational materials for law enforcement to help them recognize the indicators of human trafficking when they are encountered. These resources help those in law enforcement focus on serving and protecting the most vulnerable populations. In October of 2020, the Blue Campaign offered a pocket-sized card that campus law enforcement and safety officials can carry with them, providing the indicators of human trafficking as it relates to college students and campuses. The Campaign also offers a two-page fact sheet for law enforcement about immigration relief options for victims of human trafficking.

National 911 Annual Report released

The National 911 Program recently released its 2020 National 911 Annual Report, in collaboration with the National Association of State 911 Administrators (NASNA), covering data gathered in the 2019 calendar year. This report provides current and comprehensive state 911 data, voluntarily submitted by states and territories about their own systems.

The report will be of interest to any personnel working in 911 call centers as well as senior staff in emergency management, law enforcement, fire and EMS who may use this data for analysis of their own 911 capabilities for budgeting and planning purposes. The report's data can help answer key questions, such as:

- How many of each type of 911 calls are answered per year?
- How many primary and secondary public safety answering points (PSAPs) does a specific state have?
- Which states provide Emergency Medical Dispatch and follow a specific formal protocol?
- In which states are there minimum training requirements for telecommunicators?
- How far along are states in the procurement process for specific NG911 parts, functions and components?
- What is the progress toward NG911 in each state?

The National 911 Program's State of 911 webinar series will be discussing this report as part of an upcoming webinar on January 12, 2021, from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. EST. Registration for this webinar is required, however, if you can't participate, webinars in this series are recorded and posted publicly at the State of 911 Webinar Series page.

Latest CISA guidance and directives on SolarWinds Orion software supply chain compromise

The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Protection Agency (CISA) released another Joint Statement on January 5, along with the Federal Bureau Of Investigation (FBI), the Office Of The Director Of National Intelligence (ODNI), and the National Security Agency (NSA). The statement officially acknowledges that the incident is "likely Russian in origin" and likely "an intelligence gathering effort." Approximately 18,000 customers of the Solar Winds' Orion product are impacted, but a much smaller number have been compromised by follow-on activity. CISA is identified as the lead agency for asset response and is focused on sharing information about this incident quickly with government and private sector partners.

The significance of this breach has compelled many government agencies to take immediate mitigation measures. CISA has released a CISA Insight, offering concise guidance to leaders of any organization impacted, entitled What Every Leader Needs to Know About the Ongoing APT Cyber Activity.

Microsoft has also been assisting with this cyber incident. Microsoft has created the Solorigate Research Center for information and resources on the SolarWinds compromise. This information may be useful to IT administrators who are mitigating this cyber incident in their organizations. Microsoft's blog, Using Microsoft 365 Defender to protect against Solorigate, will also be of interest to cybersecurity professionals.

Visit CISA's website for the latest official directives and guidance on this significant and ongoing cyber incident.

Recent swatting attacks target residents with camera and voice-capable smart devices

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) issued this public service announcement to warn users who own smart home devices with cameras and voice capabilities to use complex, unique passwords and enable two-factor authentication to help protect against "swatting" attacks. Swatting is a term used to describe a hoax call made to emergency services, typically reporting an immediate threat to human life, to draw a response from law enforcement and the S.W.A.T. team to a specific location.

Recently, offenders have been using victims' smart devices, including video and audio capable home surveillance devices, to carry out swatting attacks. Smart home device manufacturers recently notified law enforcement that offenders have been using stolen e-mail passwords to access smart devices with cameras and voice capabilities. The offenders then log into the smart device and hijack features, including the live-stream camera and device speakers.

Ten benefits of running cybersecurity exercises

There may be no better way to ascertain your organization's strengths and weaknesses than by running regular security drills. While most organizations understand the need to build defenses and develop policies to reduce the risk and potential impact of a successful cyberattack, many fail to rigorously test those defenses.

Cybersecurity exercises are simulations of specific cyberattack scenarios that organizations can play through to put their defenses to a real-world test. Organizations can gain valuable insights into what their real-world response capabilities to such an attack would be. Consider these ten opportunities for achieving greater resilience to cyberattacks that can come from practicing these types of exercises as an organization:

1. Identify your strengths.
2. Improve your response.
3. Train people.
4. Define costs and timescales.
5. Determine external needs.
6. Collect metrics.
7. Identify your weaknesses.

8. Update your policies.
9. Find non-compliance risks.
10. Increase threat awareness.

Declaring war against cyber negligence

The recent significant cyberattack involving federal government networks first disclosed in December 2020 by FireEye highlight how critical it is that American businesses and government agencies alike take a drastically different approach to cybersecurity.

Cybersecurity professionals need to shift their focus from "indicators of compromise" to data protection, which will limit how widespread the impact of these vicious digital attacks can be. It is far easier for cybersecurity manufacturers to deliver services from their own cloud. It may be less expensive for the vendor but relying on a "trusted 3rd party" for your security is a foundational vulnerability that has been proven to be disastrous for the customer. Firewalls, antivirus and network monitoring tools still have their place, but a shift must be taken to provide more independence between the owner of data and its protectors.

What Are Sources Of Iran's Financing Of Terrorist Groups? – OpEd

January 6, 2021 Cyrus Yaqubi 0 Comments

By Cyrus Yaqubi

Mohammad Reza Naghdi, deputy coordinator of the IRGC, admitted that Iran has spent billions of dollars in the region over the past 30 years, in an interview with "Studio Negah Yek", of the first channel of Iranian TV.

Of course, the IRGC's budget and its financial aid to its allied forces in the region is not clear, but the main income of the IRGC, in addition to its dedicated official budget by the government, is provided from both domestic and foreign sources. The IRGC is currently involved in all economic and financial affairs in Iran and is the owner or shareholder of the largest commercial and economic sectors of the country, while it is exempt from paying taxes, and even the government does not supervise the IRGC's financial affairs.

The IRGC controls several berths in the Persian Gulf ports and exports and imports from these berths without customs control, including oil, so nobody is aware of the IRGC's revenue.

Recently, some Hezbollah and Hamas officials announced huge financial contributions from the IRGC to them. In his speech, Mohammad Reza Naghdi introduced these countries as Iran's strategic depth in the region.

In this interview, he spoke about the readiness of the "regional militias" and stated that they have "done great deeds so far." Of course, he did not comment on these "great deeds", but it is clear the major bombings in Saudi Arabia, Iraq and even Argentina are among them.

Recently, Mahmoud Al-Zahar, a senior Hamas figure, announced that Iran's financial aid was made by Qassem Soleimani, the commander of the Quds Force. Hezbollah leader, Hassan Nasrallah, also spoke about Iran's financial aid and the role of Qassem Soleimani in delivering it.

Political groups close to Iran, in Lebanon and the Gaza Strip, occasionally refer to "abundant Iranian aid" to justify to their people the IRGC meddling in their countries, but their words become a problem for the mullahs' regime when it reaches the Iranians.

Hassan Nasrallah said recently, to show the importance of Iran, in one of his speeches, "even our food and clothing money is provided by the Islamic Republic"; "As long as the Islamic Republic has money, we have money," he said of the US sanctions on Lebanese banks. This kind of talk has caused the Iranians, the majority of whom live below the poverty line, to take to the streets to address the Iranian authorities with slogans such as "Leave Lebanon, think about us".

The mullahs, on the other hand, have no explanation to offer Iranian public opinion for such expenditures and so resort to violently suppressing any protest.

Recently, the speeches of a representative of the Hamas government and the Secretary General of the Lebanese Hezbollah on the anniversary of the killing of Qassem Soleimani, the commander of the Quds Force, once again caused controversy.

In an interview, Mahmoud Al-Zahar said, "Qassem Soleimani had paid $22 million to Hamas."

Al-Zahar, the former foreign minister and senior member of the Hamas leadership, told Al-Alam, Iran's state-run Arabic-language network, on Sunday, December 27, 2020, "In 2006, I explained to Qassem Soleimani in Tehran, 'the problem of staff salaries and social services and other assistances", of the people of Gaza, "Haj Qassem immediately responded to our request, handing us $ 22 million in cash in several suitcases the next day when we left Tehran."

According to Mohammad Javad Akbarin, a journalist writing in the Islamic Republic of Iran newspaper, Iran had given more than $ 6 million to Hamas just in the previous seven months before donating those suitcases full of money.

Hezbollah's secretary general, Hassan Nasrallah, also said in a televised interview that Qassem Soleimani "behind the scenes and out of sight" provided significant financial assistance to certain Lebanese people in addition to providing missiles and military equipment.

In an interview with Al-Mayadin, Nasrallah said that, at that time "Iran's financial situation was better than now, and oil prices were higher, and Soleimani gave the owners of 200,000 homes destroyed in the 33-day war with Israel, one-year rent and living expenses to rebuild their houses."

The Chinese Xinhua news agency reported in May 2019 that Iran had distributed $651,000 to Palestinian families in Gaza during a Quds Day ceremony in Gaza.

According to Abu Eida, the head of the "Committee of Martyrs" in Gaza, the Islamic Republic provided $2 million to Hamas in November 2018 alone, which he said was "a small amount compared to previous years."

These figures on Qassem Soleimani's "aid" to Hamas and Hezbollah are published, while it is not clear what exactly is his or the IRGC's source for such generosity.

Given that Iran, in addition to paying the salaries of its army and IRGC personnel, has spent a lot of money on industries, such as nuclear, missile and submarine, during these years, spends millions of dollars for the military presence of its forces in Iraq, Syria and Yemen and pays more millions of dollars to its proxy groups in various countries. Iran's military budget does not appear to cover all these costs, and Qassem Soleimani may have used other informal sources of funding.

The Iranian regime, via its Quds Force, over the past forty years also gained influence over the Lebanese who emigrated to Latin America many years ago. This minority is accused of involvement in drug trafficking and money laundering.

The CIA claims that Latin America is one of the most important money laundering centers of the Quds Force and part of the proceeds of drug trafficking are transferred to Hezbollah.

Hezbollah of Lebanon also made news headlines for drug trafficking in Italy in recent times. Italian media reported a couple weeks ago that a shipment of more than $1 billion worth of amphetamine pills discovered in June 2020 belonged to Lebanese Hezbollah.

The US Treasury Department said in a statement eight years ago that it had obtained evidence that Gholamreza Baghbani, a senior commander in the Quds Force, was allowing Afghan smugglers to send their drugs across Iran to European countries. In return he used them to deliver weapons and ammunition to Taliban forces in Afghanistan.

It seems that the IRGC and its affiliated forces, including the Lebanese Hezbollah, despite their idealistic slogans, do not shy away from anything, and the income from this drug related work probably goes a long way towards the Quds Force being able to cover the massive expenses of its interventions in other countries.

Russia Sees U.S. Democracy 'Limping' After Capitol Stormed

By Michael Mainville for AFP
Updated: 22 hours ago

Pro-Trump rioters storm the US Capitol BRENDAN SMIALOWSKI / AFP

Russia on Thursday pointed to the storming of the U.S. Capitol building as evidence of America's decline, with officials saying its out-of-date electoral system and deep divisions had left its democracy "limping on both feet".

Under banners reading "Storm of the Capitol" and "Chaos in Washington", Russian state television showed rolling images of mobs of Donald Trump supporters breaking down barricades and swarming the Congress building on Wednesday, as security forces fired tear gas and police drew guns inside.

Congress formally certified Joe Biden as the next president despite the unrest, but many in Moscow said the stunning events had exposed America's democratic failings.

"The electoral system in the United States is archaic, it does not meet modern democratic standards ... and the American media have become an instrument of political struggle," foreign ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova told Russian news agencies.

"This is largely the reason for the split in society now observed in the United States."

Moscow has long bristled at U.S. criticism of the state of Russian democracy under President Vladimir Putin, accusing Washington of hypocrisy and condescension.

'Rock bottom'

Often echoing the kind of language used against Russia, officials said on Thursday that the United States was no longer in any position to lecture other countries on freedom and democracy.

"The losing side has more than enough grounds to accuse the winner of falsifications — it is clear that American democracy is limping on both feet," Konstantin Kosachyov, the chair of the Russian upper house's foreign affairs committee, said in a post on Facebook.

"The celebration of democracy has ended. It has, unfortunately, hit rock bottom, and I say this without a hint of gloating.

"America no longer charts the course and so has lost all right to set it. And, even more so, to impose it on others."

The Kremlin has itself been accused of fostering U.S. divisions with a campaign of interference and disinformation, including alleged attempts to disrupt the 2016 election in Trump's favour that prompted an FBI investigation.

With Russians celebrating Orthodox Christmas there was no reaction to the events in Washington from the Kremlin.

But pro-Kremlin lawmakers jumped on the unrest.

"The United States certainly cannot now impose electoral standards on other countries and claim to be the world's 'beacon of democracy'," the foreign affairs chief in the lower house, Leonid Slutsky, told Russian news agencies.

He said Washington was suffering after having promoted "color revolutions" around the world, like anti-Moscow uprisings in Ukraine and Georgia and the recent protests in Belarus.

"The boomerang of the colour revolutions is turning back on the United States," Slutsky said. "All this threatens to turn into a crisis in the American system of power."

'Extremists' jibe

Others appeared to use the events to justify Moscow's domestic policies.

Anton Gorelkin, a lawmaker on the lower house telecommunications committee, praised Twitter and Facebook for suspending Trump's accounts, saying it showed the need to better control social media.

"Social networks must work under strict rules within a legal framework. Because absolute freedom of information is becoming a weapon in the hands of extremists," he said in a post on his Telegram channel.

The United States and other Western countries have repeatedly condemned Russia for moves to tighten controls on social media.

Washington has been a fierce critic of moves by Putin to clamp down on dissent, most recently accusing Russia of "intensifying repression of its civil society" with a new law last month expanding rules against NGOs and media considered foreign agents.

Moscow says the United States cynically uses such claims to pursue its agenda and maintain its global position.

Tensions between the Cold War-era rivals have hit new highs in recent years, with a raft of U.S. sanctions imposed on Russian officials, disputes over arms control treaties and American accusations of major Russian hacking attacks.

Etihad and Israir Airlines Enters in Pilot Training Partnership

Etihad Aviation Training (EAT) has signed a contract with Israir Airlines to offer Full-Flight Simulator pilot training for Israir Airlines' Airbus A320 pilots. As part of the agreement, Israir will dry lease EAT's Full-Flight Simulators at the training facility located in Abu Dhabi. The training will be conducted by Israir instructors at the Etihad training facility. Captain Paolo La Cava, Managing Director Etihad Aviation Training, said: "Continuing our commitment to providing highly skilled pilots by offering state-of-the-art training facilities, EAT is looking forward to working with Israir Airlines and is anticipating further collaboration with the airline to cement this landmark agreement."

Blackstone, Gates Team Up for Signature Aviation Bid as Carlyle Circles

Blackstone won over Signature Aviation's biggest shareholder Bill Gates for a possible $4.3 billion bid for the British private jet servicing company, going head-to-head with another potential suitor Carlyle. Blackstone's agreement with Gates' Cascade Investment Llc for its planned offer announced on Friday comes just hours after Signature confirmed an initial takeover approach from Carlyle. Blackstone and Cascade, which already owns a 19% stake in London-based Signature, are in advanced talks with the company about their proposal that involves a cash offer of 3.81 pounds per share. The company said last month it was minded to recommend the Blackstone proposal.

Aviation Bosses Demand End to Quarantine After Introduction of Mandatory Testing

The aviation industry has called for the government to scrap its quarantine regime following the introduction of a mandatory testing regime. Under the new rules, which kick in next week, all international arrivals, including UK nationals, will be required to present a negative coronavirus test taken up to 72 hours prior to departure. The airline industry welcomed the development, but said that the government should use the new system to get rid of the quarantine regime for good. Heathrow Airport chief exec John Holland-Kaye said: "There needs to be a plan for what's going to come next so that we can start to get aviation back to some level of normality while keeping people safe. What we'd like to see is that testing before you take off becomes the standard as an alternative to quarantine."

MARITIME

Albanian PM in Athens with Maritime Zones on Agenda
01/08/2021

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama will hold informal meetings Friday with his Greek counterpart Kyriakos Mitsotakis and Foreign Minister Nikos Dendias during a private visit to Athens against the backdrop of the agreement between the two countries for recourse to the International Court of Justice in The Hague for the delimitation of their maritime zones. The issue is also connected with Albania's European aspirations. Rama and Dendias had met during the latter's visit to Tirana, where it was agreed to refer the dispute over maritime zones to The Hague. However, the move requires the two sides to sign a formal statement of intent, which has not yet been done.

GDF, US Coast Guard to Conduct Exercises Offshore Guyana This Weekend

The Guyana Defense Force (GDF) and the United States of America (USA) Coast Guard are expected to commence their first joint service operation tomorrow to combat illegal fishing activities in local waters. According to a GDF press release, on Saturday, the GDF and US Coast Guard will engage in their first series of activities, stemming from the Shiprider Agreement that was signed last September by the two countries. The agreement allows the US Coast Guard to patrol local waters along with the GDF coast guard to combat illicit activities. The US Coast Guard will be using its Cutter Stone vessel, one of its newest, to conduct the joint service patrol.

United Overseas Group to Acquire United Arab Chemical Carriers

Investment company United Overseas Group (UOG) is to acquire Dubai-based shipping company United Arab Chemical Carriers (UACC), the two companies said on Thursday. The deal is subject to regulatory approvals and is expected to close in the first quarter, they said in a statement, without disclosing the value. The sale of UACC, whose shareholders include the sovereign wealth funds of Saudi Arabia and Qatar, was held up in 2017 after a bitter diplomatic rift broke between the Gulf Arab states. A source close to the deal said political differences among UACC's shareholders had not been a recent obstacle to the sale. Instead, shareholders had sought an all cash transaction, declining offers involving share swaps, the source said.

China Cancels Democratic Republic of Congo Loans as It Joins Belt and Road

China has cancelled the Democratic Republic of Congo's interest-free loans that matured in 2020 and promised to fund infrastructure projects as the Central African nation joined the Belt and Road Initiative. Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said Beijing would write off loans to DRC worth an estimated US$28 million to help the country overcome the impact of Covid-19, and give US$17 million in other financial support. On Wednesday, DRC became the 45th country to join the belt and road, President Xi Jinping's pet trade and infrastructure development plan, which has funded construction of highways, railways and power plants across Africa.

Hyundai Says in Early Talks with Apple After Electric Vehicle Tie-Up Report

South Korea's Hyundai Motor Co said it was in early talks with Apple, after local media reported the firms were discussing an electric car and battery tie-up, sending Hyundai shares surging 25%. The report comes weeks after Reuters reported that Apple was moving forward with self-driving car technology and was aiming to produce a passenger vehicle that could include its own breakthrough battery technology as early as 2024. Earlier on Friday, Korea Economic Daily TV said the iPhone maker and Hyundai were in discussions to develop self-driving electric vehicles by 2027 and develop batteries at U.S. factories operated by either Hyundai or its affiliate Kia Motors Corp. Apple and Hyundai are in discussion, but as it is early stage, nothing has been decided.

Azerbaijani Gas Reaches Italy Through New Pipeline

Azerbaijani gas has reached Italy through the Trans Adriatic Gas Pipeline (TAP), Turkish Foreign Ministry said on Friday. "Southern Gas Corridor has become operational," the ministry said on Twitter. "A new chapter has been opened in Turkey's contribution to energy supply security of the rest of Europe," it added. TAP transports natural gas from the Shah Deniz field in the Azerbaijan sector of the Caspian Sea to Europe. The last segment and the European leg of the Southern Gas Corridor, TAP was completed in October 2019 after a construction period of four and half years. The $40 billion value chain of the Southern Gas Corridor includes the South Caucasus Pipeline, the Trans-Anatolian Natural Gas Pipeline (TANAP) and TAP.

Space Development Agency Contracts to Build Missile-Warning Satellites

Following a series of contract protests, the Space Development Agency again awarded SpaceX a $149 million contract and L3Harris a $193.5 million contract to each build four satellites to detect and track ballistic and hypersonic missiles. The contracts to both companies were originally awarded Oct. 5 but work had to be stopped after competitors Airbus and Raytheon filed protests with the Government Accountability

Office challenging the awards. Space Development Agency spokeswoman Jennifer Elzea said in a statement Jan. 7 that work on the eight satellites, known as Tracking Layer Tranche 0, recommenced Dec. 28 when a temporary stop-work order was lifted. The Space Development Agency is planning to launch Tranche 0 satellites in late 2022.

Pakistan Anti-Terror Court Jails Mumbai Attack Mastermind Lakhvi

A Pakistani court on Friday sentenced Zakiur Rehman Lakhvi, the globally designated terrorist leader of Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT) and mastermind of Mumbai attack, to three prison terms of five years each over terror financing. The sentences, under three sections of Anti-Terrorism Act, will run concurrently. The court on Friday announced its verdict after recording the statements of all witnesses in the case. India accuses Lakhvi of masterminding the 26/11 attacks of November, 2008 in Mumbai that killed 166 people. He was arrested by Pakistan in 2008 but later released on bail. Pakistan claims that India didn't provide concrete evidence to convict Lakhvi.

Bomb Kills 4 Soldiers, One Civilian in Cameroon

Four soldiers and a civilian were killed Wednesday when an official convoy was hit by makeshift explosives in a restive English-speaking region of Cameroon, the government said. A government spokesman blamed "separatist terrorists" for the killings in the Northwest province, where Anglophone separatists are fighting for independence. The official whose convoy was apparently targeted was unhurt, spokesman Rene Emmanuel Sadi said in a statement. In Anglophone Cameroon, the army and separatist groups have been fighting each other for three years.

CYBER

Hackney Council Stolen Data Published on Dark Web Forum
01/08/2021

Cyber criminals who launched a ransomware attack on Hackney Borough Council in October have published on a dark web forum what they claim to be documents from the council. Operators of Pysa (or Mespinoza) ransomware said they were behind the cyber-attack which disrupted the Council's online services and left many of its systems inoperable four months ago. In a statement on its website, the Council said that only a 'limited set' of data has been released which is easily findable. Some media reports claimed that the data dump appears to contain a large amount of sensitive information, including passport data, staff data, photo IDs, scans of tenancy audit documents for public housing tenants, and information on community safety.

Iran’s Revolutionary Guards Unveil Underground Missile Base in Gulf

Iran's elite Revolutionary Guards unveiled an underground missile base at an undisclosed Gulf location on Friday, Iranian state media reported, at a time of heightened tension between Tehran and the United States. Last year, the Guards said Iran had built underground “missile cities” along the Gulf coastline, warning of a “nightmare for Iran’s enemies.” "The base is one of several bases housing the Guards' Navy's strategic missiles," the state media quoted the head of the Guards, Major General Hossein Salami, as saying.

Chinese Embassy Tweet About Uighurs Draws Instant Condemnation

In a new state media report, the Chinese government is defending its policies against Muslim women in the country's westernmost province, where it's been accused of forced mass sterilization -- a horrific crime it strongly denies. In a tweet Thursday, the Chinese Embassy in the U.S. shared the report, saying that Muslim women in Xinjiang province are "no longer baby-making machines" and that the decrease in population growth throughout the province led to a drop in terrorism. The tweet garnered instead blowback and calls for Twitter to remove it, given the Chinese government's oppressive campaign against Uighurs and other Muslim ethnic minorities.

Kim Jong Un Shows Intention to Expand Diplomacy

North Korea's state-run television says that leader Kim Jong Un has laid out the direction for developing the country's diplomatic relations in a policy speech he gave at the ongoing ruling Workers' Party congress. Korean Central Television reported on Friday that Kim commented on reviewing inter-Korean ties in the speech delivered on Thursday, the third day of the congress. It reported Kim raised the issue of reshaping South Korean relations "as required by the prevailing situation and the changed times." Without providing further details, Korean Central Television reported that Kim "declared the general orientation and the policy stand of our party for comprehensively expanding and developing the external relations."

1. PBSO: 20 pounds of fentanyl found in Acreage home; man's bail set at more than $2 million. January 6, 2021 (The Palm Beach Post). Acreage, Florida. What started with a search warrant at a storage unit near Royal Palm Beach led to the arrest of a 38-year-old man for allegedly trafficking drugs he kept at the facility and in his Acreage home, according to the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office [PBSO]. On Monday, agents went to Cubesmart storage on Belvedere Road near State Road 7, where they found thousands of oxycodone pills, a pill press, plastic bags and other drugs, including cocaine, bath salts, ecstasy and 28 pounds of methamphetamines. From there, investigators made their way to his Acreage home on Tangerine Boulevard, where they waited until he returned. After getting a search warrant, they found several other drugs and related items throughout the house. In the kitchen, they found a black pistol, rubber gloves and a respirator mask that investigators say is typically used when working with chemicals, and a detector used to find "bugs," or surveillance equipment. PBSO did not disclose how it came to identify Henry's storage unit for possible drug trafficking other than a receipt for the unit that investigators found during a "trash pull" from his home Dec. 29. It's unclear how long they had been monitoring Henry for alleged drug activity.

3. Enormous 'Made In Lebanon' Drug Shipment Caught In Egypt. January 6, 2021 (The 961). Lebanon was revealed to be the origin of a massive drug shipment, involving 8.22 tons of hashish and more than 8 million captagon tablets, recently busted in Egypt. The drugs were found in a shipment that recently reached Egypt's Port Said, which was only supposed to be a transit point in its path toward Khoms, Libya, the intended final destination. The container was loaded on December 19th, 2020, in a warehouse belonging to the exporting company in Lebanon, before being sent to the Port of Beirut. The official said the drugs were likely manufactured in Syria and smuggled through illegal land routes toward the warehouse of the plastic fabrication company, which in turn packed the narcotic substances into boxes of its own, bearing the signature, "Made in Lebanon." The street value of the busted drugs was estimated by the Egyptian Interior Ministry to be close to $39 million.

4. Take-home Naloxone to save lives. January 6, 2021 (Scottish Government). Take-home Naloxone will be given to people at high risk of accidental overdoses, in a move designed to reduce the number of drug deaths. This will include those who have been resuscitated by the Scottish Ambulance Service (SAS) following an accidental overdose. SAS crews responded to around 5,000 incidents in which Naloxone, an opiate antidote, was administered in 2019. Providing take-home kits means friends and relatives of those at risk will be able to administer Naloxone themselves while the ambulance is on its way, further reducing the chance of a fatality. The kits will be supplied at incidents after 999 has been called for a person experiencing an accidental overdose. Those at risk of witnessing a future opiate overdose, such as family and care groups, will be given a kit and training in how to administer it. https://www.gov.scot/news/take-home-naloxone-to-save-lives/

5. Israeli research reveals: How hackers turn synthetic DNA into poison. January 6, 2021 (Geektime). According to the Ben Gurion University research team's findings, a vulnerability in a U.S. Department of Health's protocol could lead synthetic DNA manufacturers to be exposed to cyber-attacks. The vulnerability made it possible to bypass strict filtering processes and further complicate the security software's ability to identify the harmful DNA sequence. The team, led by Dr. Rami Puzis from the Software and Systems Engineering Department, added that the vulnerability they discovered, comprised of numerous DNA reliability failures, can enable cyber-attacks. A poisonous DNA is injected into a routine shipment. This kind of new threat demonstrates how malicious code can disrupt biological processes. Puzis further adds that from trials performed by his team showed that 16 out of 50 malicious DNA sequences were left undiscovered based on U.S. screening policies: "This attack scenario highlights the need to strengthen the synthetic DNA supply chain with security measures to prevent bio-cyber attacks. In order to tackle these threats, we provide an improved filtering algorithm, which takes into account the availability of genetic editing tools and gene shuffle." https://www.geektime.com/israeli-research-reveals-how-hackers-turn-synthetic-dna-into-poison/

1. Iran Begins Enriching Uranium to 20% Purity
Return to pre-nuclear-deal enrichment levels cuts time it would take Tehran to produce nuclear-weapons-grade fuel
By Aresu Eqbali and Jared Malsin, Wall Street Journal, Updated Jan. 4, 2021 12:56 pm ET https://www.wsj.com/articles/iran-begins-enriching-uranium-to-20-purity-11609760613
TEHRAN—Iran said Monday it has resumed enriching uranium to 20% purity, exceeding limits set in a 2015 nuclear deal and slashing the time it would take for Tehran to produce the grade of fuel needed for a nuclear weapon. The nuclear activity, which returns Iran to an enrichment level it last reached before entering the international accord, dials up pressure on Washington and crosses a red line set by European countries that remained committed to the agreement after the Trump administration withdrew from it in 2018. The move threatens to complicate President-elect Joe Biden's plan to rejoin the deal that placed limits on Tehran's nuclear program, but which floundered after the U.S. left it and reimposed crippling economic sanctions on Tehran. Mr. Biden has said the U.S. would rejoin the deal as long as Iran complies with its terms…

USS Nimitz to Stay in Middle East to Counter Iran Threat on Anniversary
Acting secretary of defense's move marks change of heart after he had initially ordered carrier home to Washington state

WASHINGTON—The Pentagon's acting chief abruptly reversed course, sending an aircraft carrier to the Middle East to counter threats posed by Iran, days after directing it to leave the region over the advice of top military advisers. Acting Secretary of Defense Chris Miller said in a statement Sunday evening that he had directed the USS Nimitz to the Middle East, three days after ordering that it be sent home. The move was a remarkable change of heart for Mr. Miller, who had previously ordered the carrier be sent home against advice by top commanders that the carrier needed to remain near the Middle East because it represented an important show of force at a time when the threat posed by Iran was high, officials said...

In Reversal, Pentagon Announces Aircraft Carrier Nimitz Will Remain in Middle East

Bracing for a possible Iranian-linked attack, U.S. officials warn 'the threat streams are very real'

The U.S. military is bracing for a possible attack on American personnel and interests in Iraq, U.S. defense officials said, days before the first anniversary of an American drone strike that killed an Iranian general in Baghdad. The officials spoke as two B-52 bombers carried out a round-trip, 30-hour mission from Minot Air Force Base in North Dakota to the Middle East ending on Wednesday, in an effort to show American presence and military might in the region to deter Iran. The Air Force conducted similar missions twice before in the last 45 days…

2. Chinese Researcher Sentenced for Making False Statements to Federal Agents
Defendant stole vials of biological research from Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and attempted to take them aboard a flight to China
U.S. Attorney's Office, District of Massachusetts, Wednesday, Jan. 6, 2021
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/19002
BOSTON – A Chinese national was sentenced today in federal court in Boston for making false statements in connection with his theft of 19 vials of biological research. Zaosong Zheng, 31, was sentenced by U.S. District Court Judge Denise J. Casper to time served (approximately 87 days), three years of supervised release and ordered removed from the United States. In December 2020, Zheng pleaded guilty to one count of making false, fictitious or fraudulent statements. Zheng was arrested on Dec. 10, 2019, at Boston's Logan International Airport and charged by criminal complaint. In August 2018, Zheng entered the United States on a J-1 visa and conducted cancer-cell research at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston from Sept. 4, 2018 to Dec. 9, 2019. On Dec. 9, 2019, Zheng stole vials of biological research, hid the vials in his luggage, and attempted to take them out of the United States aboard a flight destined for China. Federal officers at Logan Airport discovered the vials hidden in a sock inside one of Zheng's bags, and not properly packaged. When asked by federal officers whether he was traveling with any biological items or research, Zheng lied and answered "no." Zheng later admitted he had stolen the vials from a lab at Beth Israel. Zheng stated that he intended to bring the vials to China to use them to conduct research in his own laboratory and publish the results under his own name…

3. Capitol police chief defends response to 'criminal' rioters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capitol Police Chief Steven Sund on Thursday defended his department's response to the violent breach at the Capitol, saying officers "acted valiantly when faced with thousands of individuals involved in violent riotous actions" as they stormed the building. Rioters "actively attacked" Capitol police and other law enforcement officers Wednesday with metal pipes, discharged chemical irritants, and took up other weapons against our officers," Sund said in a statement. The attack on the Capitol was "unlike any I have ever experienced in my 30 years in law enforcement here in Washington, D.C.," said Sund, a former city police officer. "Make no mistake: these mass riots were not First Amendment activities; they were criminal riotous behavior. The actions of the USCP officers were heroic given the situation they faced." Sund's statement came after lawmakers from both parties vowed an investigation into how law enforcement handled Wednesday's violent breach at the Capitol, questioning whether a lack of preparedness allowed a mob to occupy and vandalize the building…

Capitol Police Weren't Prepared for Rioters, Authorities Say

WASHINGTON—Federal authorities had planned to deal with protests this week with a relatively small, minimally visible presence, according to law-enforcement officials, hoping to avoid inflaming tensions as a show of force had done during unrest last year in Portland, Ore., and other cities. That approach seemed to have backfired on Wednesday, when thousands of pro-Trump rioters surrounded the U.S. Capitol and some easily breached the barricades and stormed the building, with one woman fatally shot by Capitol Police, according to law-enforcement officials, and three others dead in what the city's police chief described as "medical emergencies." Some rioters fired what he called "chemical irritants" at officers who were guarding the complex to gain access to the building…

4. More than a week later, FBI avoids terror label for bombing
By Kimberlee Kruesi and Eric Tucker, Associated Press, Jan. 6, 2021
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18996
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The FBI investigation into whether the Nashville bombing was a terrorist act has sparked criticism about a possible racial double standard and drawn questions from downtown business owners whose insurance coverage could be affected by the bureau's assessment. More than a week after an explosion that struck at the heart of a major American city, the FBI has resisted labeling it an act of terrorism, an indication that evidence gathered so far does not conclusively establish that the bomber was motivated by political ideology — a key factor in any formal declaration of terrorism. The bureau is still examining evidence and has not announced any conclusions, but investigators are known to be reviewing whether Anthony Warner believed in conspiracy theories involving aliens and 5G cellphone technology. Warner died in the Christmas Day explosion of a recreational vehicle that also wounded three other people. "When we assess an event for domestic terrorism nexus, it has to be tied to an ideology. It's the use of force or violence in the furtherance of a political or social ideology or event. We haven't tied that yet," Doug Korneski, the FBI agent in charge of the agency's Memphis office, told reporters last week at a news conference…

(Reuters) -Federal, state and local law enforcement officers on Monday were searching for the motive behind a bombing that rocked Nashville on Christmas morning, with no concrete clues yet emerging as to why the 63-year-old suspect carried out his suicide mission… Nashville Mayor John Cooper has said that local officials felt there had to be some connection between the bombing, which occurred near an AT&T Inc. transmission building on the city's bustling Second Avenue, and the company. At the briefing on Monday, Rausch said Warner's father had worked for AT&T but that it was unclear if that was in any way connected…

Hawazen Sameer Mothafar, whose trial had been scheduled to begin Tuesday in Portland, allegedly produced and disseminated Islamic State propaganda and recruiting material through social media platforms. Working from a Portland suburb, Mothafar also distributed online articles that described how to kill and maim with a knife and that encouraged attacks, the indictment says. Mothafar has pleaded not guilty to charges of providing material support to a designated terrorist organization and conspiring to provide that support…

A federal judge upheld a Manhattan jury's conviction of a Bangladeshi immigrant for blowing up a pipe bomb in a crowded subway tunnel in Times Square, according to a decision released Monday. Lawyers for Akayed Ullah, 30, had challenged the 2018 guilty verdict on several grounds — including claiming that their client had not acted on behalf of ISIS when he detonated the crude explosive that injured only himself. But Circuit Judge Richard Sullivan, who presided over the Manhattan federal trial before he was promoted to the appeals court, knocked down the assertion. "The record evidence…amply establishes that Defendant acted at ISIS's direction by heeding the call of the organization's propaganda and recruiting materials," Sullivan wrote of the bungled Dec. 11, 2017, terrorist attack in a pedestrian tunnel during the morning rush hour. "Perhaps most importantly, Defendant told police that he carried out the attack 'for the Islamic State.'"…

The NYPD has been on the alert for weeks for possible attacks similar to Friday's deliberate RV explosion in Nashville, The Post has learned. An internal NYPD memo issued earlier this month warned that law enforcement were the "priority targets" for terror attacks involving homemade bombs and vehicle arson. The Dec. 14 memo, obtained by The Post, said violent extremists and "malicious criminal actors" might go after cops to exacerbate tensions, "exploit civil unrest" and incite further violence. The document referenced Al-Qaeda propaganda released on Nov. 26 that urged radical jihadists to exploit the COVID-19 pandemic to attack "priority targets." Those targets included retired officers, business leaders, intelligence personnel and "soldiers and police of every brand."…

Amarnath Amarasingam and Mubin Shaikh are both regarded as experts in radicalization. Both say they have spent extensive amounts of time getting to know and giving advice to Shehroze Chaudhry, a 26-year-old Burlington, Ont. man now facing a rare terrorism-hoax charge and recently labelled a "fabulist" by the New York Times over his claims that he committed atrocities on behalf of the Islamic State in Syria. For his part, Shaikh, a Seneca College professor and former counterterrorism operative for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and Royal Canadian Mounted Police, says he now believes Chaudhry never stepped foot in Syria and got caught up in his own "fantasy." Yet Amarasingam, a Queen's University professor, isn't so quick to dismiss Chaudhry's claims, noting he's seen signs of "remorse" and "survivor's guilt" in the young man. "There are specifics to his story that he may be making up or exaggerating, but, yes, I'm still inclined to believe he went to Syria until I see some evidence to the contrary," he told the Star…

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Justice Department has become the latest federal agency to say it was breached by hackers in the Russia-linked cyberattack that has ripped through government agencies and an unknown number of corporate networks. About 3% of the Justice Department's Microsoft Office email accounts were potentially accessed in the attack, the department said Wednesday. The Justice Department's chief information officer learned of the previously unknown malicious activity on Dec. 24 and has "eliminated the identified method by which the actor was accessing" Microsoft Office email accounts, Marc Raimondi, a Justice Department spokesman, said in a written statement. There is no indication classified systems were affected, Mr. Raimondi said, as the department classified the breach as a major incident requiring notification to other agencies and Congress. Even unclassified email accounts, though, can contain sensitive information about investigations and potentially national security related issues, said Chris Painter, a former senior official at the Justice and State departments who worked on cybersecurity issues. "A lot of DOJ work happens on unclassified systems."…

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuters) -The office of the U.S. Director of National Intelligence on Tuesday said Russia was "likely" behind a string of hacks identified last month that gained access to several federal agencies. The office, along with the FBI, the National Security Agency, and Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency inside the Department of Homeland Security, in a joint statement, said the hackers' goal appeared to be collecting intelligence, rather than any destructive acts. They said they had so far identified "fewer than 10" agencies that were hacked. The agencies said that the actor, "likely Russian in origin, was responsible for most or all of the recently discovered, ongoing cyber compromises of both government and non-governmental networks." The investigation is continuing, they said, and could turn up additional government victims…

The Christmas Day bombing in Nashville hit a weak point in telecommunications infrastructure, disrupting phone and internet service for days and underscoring a key risk for increasingly digitized businesses. A recreational vehicle exploded in front of an AT&T Inc. switching station, knocking out a central node that directs data from users and businesses across telecom systems. The incident, information technology experts and executives say, highlights how a terrorist attack, natural disaster or cyber incident can do widespread economic damage should it hit such a location… Telecom networks in particular cities or regions converge at these so-called central offices. While AT&T said Monday that it restored most service in Nashville, the incident illustrates how a problem at one of these physical locations can send ripple effects across an entire region's digital infrastructure. Law-enforcement officials have considered whether the AT&T facility was targeted in the attack…

14. Texas Man Sentenced to 2½ Years in Prison for Scheming to Create Fake Airline Employee IDs to Fraudulently Obtain Free Flights
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18998

LOS ANGELES – A former Mesa Airlines employee was sentenced today to 30 months in federal prison for conspiring to fraudulently obtain nearly 2,000 free flights for himself and others on Spirit Airlines and to manufacture counterfeit Mesa employee identification badges. Hubbard Bell, 32, of Houston, Texas, was sentenced by United States District Judge Michael W. Fitzgerald, who also ordered him to pay $150,000 in restitution to the victim, Spirit Airlines. Bell, this case's lead defendant, pleaded guilty in September 2020 to one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud… After Mesa Airlines terminated Bell's employment, from February 2016 to November 2017, he conspired with others to sell the stolen and unauthorized information of Mesa employees – including their names, dates of hire, and employee identification numbers – that were needed to book free flights on Spirit Airlines through Spirit's web portal for themselves and others…

15. Fiery oil train crash was near where two arrested, accused of attempted terrorist attack on tracks: feds investigate, By The Associated Press, Updated Dec 24, 2020; Posted Dec 24, 2020
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18980
BELLINGHAM, Wash. — Federal and local authorities were investigating a fiery oil car train derailment north of Seattle near where two people were arrested last month and accused of attempting a terrorist attack on train tracks to disrupt plans for a natural gas pipeline. Seven train cars carrying crude oil derailed and five caught fire Tuesday, sending a large plume of black smoke into the sky close to the Canadian border. There were no injuries in the derailment about 100 miles north of Seattle. Officials were asked about recent attempts to sabotage oil trains, but they said the investigation was just beginning… Officials with the National Transportation Safety Board along with the FBI and other federal, state and local agencies were on the scene. Last month federal authorities in Seattle charged two people with a terrorist attack on train tracks, saying they placed "shunts" on Burlington Northern Santa Fe tracks. Shunts consist of a wire strung across the tracks, mimicking the electrical signal of a train. The devices can cause trains to automatically brake and can disable railroad crossing guards...

WASHINGTON – Today, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) designated a China-based supplier of graphite electrodes, a key element in steel production, as well as twelve Iranian producers of steel and other metals products, and three foreign-based sales agents of a major Iranian metals and mining holding company. The Iranian metals sector is an important revenue source for the Iranian regime, generating wealth for its corrupt leaders and financing a range of nefarious activities, including the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, support for foreign terrorist groups, and a variety of human rights abuses, at home and abroad…

17. NYSE Reverses Course Again, Will Delist Three Chinese Telecom Stocks
Exchange cites guidance from the Treasury Department that says the companies' American depositary receipts are covered by a Trump executive order
By Alexander Osipovich, Wall Street Journal, Updated Jan. 6, 2021 10:30 am ET
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18993

The New York Stock Exchange will move forward with delisting three Chinese telecommunications companies targeted by an executive order from President Trump, reversing course yet again after the NYSE said earlier this week that it wouldn't delist them. The NYSE said Wednesday that trading of the U.S.-listed shares of China Mobile Ltd. CHL -1.94%, China Telecom Corp. CHA -3.18% and China Unicom (Hong Kong) Ltd. CHU -2.28% would be suspended at 4 a.m. ET on Monday. Mr. Trump's order seeks to ban trading in securities of companies that the administration says have links to the Chinese military. The NYSE said its latest action came after it received "new specific guidance" from the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control on Tuesday, which listed the three companies' American depositary receipts as being covered by Mr. Trump's order. The NYSE's statement also noted that the companies could appeal the delisting decision to the exchange…

18. Treasury Designates Venezuelan Officials Involved in Unjust Trial of the "Citgo 6"

IPT NOTE: Sec'y Pompeo's remarks posted at https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18989
Washington – Today, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) designated Venezuelan judge Lorena Carolina Cornielles Ruiz and Venezuelan prosecutor Ramon Antonio Torres Espinoza, the Venezuelan government officials who presided over and prosecuted the November 2020 trial and sentencing of six U.S. persons in Venezuela. The six U.S. persons, known as the "Citgo 6," are Citgo executives who were unjustly imprisoned in Venezuela in November 2017 after being lured to Caracas under false pretenses. The trials of each of the executives were based on politically motivated charges and marred by a lack of fair trial guarantees. Media and human rights groups denounced the treatment of the executives and were denied access to the trials…

The Justice Department announced the United States has collected $7 million of Iranian funds that will be allocated to provide compensation to American victims of international state-sponsored terrorism. The funds are the United States' share of a civil forfeiture investigation that is part of the government's pursuit of a complex international conspiracy which spanned the globe. The conspiracy's purpose was to violate the United States imposed international economic sanctions regime on Iran and included several Iranian nationals and others, who fraudulently transferred approximately $1 billion worth of Iranian-owned funds to accounts around the world… Beginning in 2011 and continuing up to 2014, the conspirators, including three Iranian nationals and, allegedly, one U.S. citizen, defrauded South Korean banks by submitting false documents purporting to show that Iranian companies were doing legitimate business with Korean companies. Based on these false documents, the conspirators succeeded in unlawfully transferring approximately $1 billion worth of Iranian-owned funds out of South Korea and into the world's financial markets…

20. French Bank to Pay $8.6 Million to Settle Syria Sanctions Case
Union de Banques Arabes et Françaises operated U.S. dollar accounts on behalf of sanctioned Syrian financial institutions, the U.S. Treasury Department said

https://www.wsj.com/articles/french-bank-to-pay-8-6-million-to-settle-syria-sanctions-case-11609799680
The U.S. Treasury Department imposed an $8.6 million fine on a French bank that officials said processed payments for blacklisted Syrian financial institutions. Union de Banques Arabes et Françaises SA, a Paris-based bank that facilitates trade finance between Europe and the Middle East, Africa and Asia, agreed to pay the fine to settle its potential civil liability for apparent violations of U.S. sanctions against Syria, the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control said Monday. The majority of UBAF's violations occurred in late 2011 following an executive order that significantly expanded U.S. sanctions against Syria, and pertained to the processing of internal transfers on behalf of Syrian entities that were followed by corresponding funds transfers through a U.S. bank, OFAC said. UBAF ultimately processed 127 transactions, totaling $2.08 billion, in apparent violation of the executive order, according to OFAC…

Marcus Pleyer, the president of the Financial Action Task Force, says certain money laundering patterns have increased during the pandemic
By Dylan Tokar, Wall Street Journal, Dec. 28, 2020 12:08 pm ET
https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18988
The coronavirus halted a wide range of economic activities, but it hasn't stopped criminals from using the global financial system to commit fraud and engage in other types of illicit behavior. Yet the pandemic has forced some countries to divert resources away from fighting money laundering and made it harder for compliance officers in the private sector to detect it, according to the Financial Action Task Force. The organization, which sets international standards and assesses countries' anti-money-laundering and counterterrorism-financing policies, has been closely monitoring the impact of the pandemic on its global network, says Marcus Pleyer, FATF's president. Mr. Pleyer began a two-year term as FATF's head in July, about two months after the organization released its first report on the AML and CTF risks posed by the pandemic. In an interview with Risk & Compliance Journal, Mr. Pleyer discussed FATF's priorities under his presidency. Edited excerpts follow…

The Libyan man who stabbed three people to death in a Reading park last June, in what prosecutors claim was a terrorist attack, was befriended by the notorious hate preacher Omar Brooks while in prison, it has emerged. Khairi Saadallah, who was granted asylum in Britain despite committing a string of criminal offences, became close to Brooks when they were both being held at HMP Bullingdon in 2017. The 26-year-old was described as being "ruthlessly efficient" when he went on the rampage in Forbury Gardens in Reading on the evening of June 20 last year, stabbing to death James Furlong, 36, David Wails, 49, and Joseph Ritchie-Bennett, 39. He also stabbed Stephen Young, Patrick Edwards and Nishit Nisudan, causing them significant injuries. Saadallah has admitted murdering three people and attempting to kill three more in the attack, but has denied he was motivated by a religious ideology…

25. South Korea Pushes Iran to Release Seized Oil Tanker

https://www.wsj.com/articles/south-korea-pushes-iran-to-release-seized-oil-tanker-11610032576
South Korea is mounting a diplomatic effort to free an oil tanker seized by Iran amid a dispute over frozen bank funds, the latest flare-up of tensions between Tehran and a U.S. ally. A South Korean delegation arrived in Tehran on Thursday, three days after the 9,797-ton oil tanker Hankuk Chemi and its 20 crew members were detained. The delegation is expected to lay the groundwork for a visit to Iran on Sunday by the country’s vice foreign minister, according to the South Korean Foreign Ministry. The tanker seizure coincides with rising international tensions between Iran and U.S. allies over the nation’s potential links to commercial shipping disruptions, progress toward a possible nuclear weapon and alleged cyberattacks. Tehran said the ship flouted environmental regulations, but Seoul disputes the claim. The tanker’s most recent inspection during a 2019 port visit in China showed no environmental violations and just minor safety breaches, according to the European Union’s shipping database, Equasis…

Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman Saeed Khatibzadeh said talks aren’t likely to begin before the South Korean vice foreign minister arrives, and called the detainment a technical issue that’s “being processed within its professional and judicial framework.”…

26. 100 Civilians Are Reported Dead After Attacks in Niger
Gunmen were described as having singled out men and boys in two villages in a region under siege by militants.
By Omar Hama Saley and Ruth Maclean, New York Times, Print, Jan. 4, 2021

NIAMEY, Niger — A hundred civilians were killed in attacks by suspected militants in the West African nation of Niger on Saturday, according to government officials. Armed men shot men and boys in what was said to be a revenge attack on the villages of Tchoma Bangou and Zaroumadareye. The villages are in the southwestern region of Tillabéri, where civilians have increasingly come under attack in the past two years… The attack, which came just a week after Niger’s presidential election, is one of the country’s deadliest ever. Prime Minister Brigi Rafini, in remarks broadcast Sunday on national television from a visit to the area of the assaults, put the death toll at 100 but did not say who was responsible, Reuters reported… Since rebels and armed Islamists took control of cities in neighboring Mali in 2012, the terrorist threat has spread across the Sahel, a strip of land south of the Sahara…

27. Three French Soldiers Killed in Mali During Counterterrorism Mission
Deaths bring France’s military fatalities to at least 47 during operations against regional militant groups since 2013
By Noemie Bisserbe, Wall Street Journal, Dec. 28, 2020 4:09 pm ET

PARIS—Three French soldiers were killed in Mali on Monday when their vehicle hit a bomb during operations under France’s counterterrorism mission in the West African nation, the French government said. France has more than 5,000 soldiers deployed in an area spanning thousands of miles from the Atlantic Ocean in the west to Chad in the east. Over the past seven years, the forces have fought branches of Islamic State, al Qaeda and other militant groups, which roam the region’s isolated villages and threaten government forces in Mali, Niger, Burkina Faso and elsewhere. The soldiers killed Monday were conducting operations around Hombori, a small town in Mali’s central Mopti province, as part of the French military’s Operation Barkhane campaign against Islamist militants across the Sahel region of Africa, authorities said. They identified the soldiers as Tanerii Mauri, Dorian Issakhanian and Quentin Pauchet.…

28. Hezbollah says it has doubled its arsenal of guided missiles

BEIRUT -- The leader of Lebanon's Hezbollah said Sunday his group now has twice as many precision-guided missiles as it had a year ago, saying Israel's efforts to prevent it from acquiring them have failed. Hassan Nasrallah, in an end-of-year interview with the Beirut-based Al-Mayadeen TV, said his group has the capability to strike anywhere in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territories. Nasrallah said that when Israel threatened through a U.S. official to target a Hezbollah facility in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa region, his group warned it would retaliate for any such attack. Israel has in recent months expressed concern that Hezbollah is trying to establish production facilities to make precision-guided missiles...

29. Pakistan Seeks to Continue Detention of Man Convicted of Murdering Wall Street Journal Reporter Daniel Pearl

https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/18982
ISLAMABAD—The Pakistani authorities were seeking new legal means to continue to detain the man convicted in 2002 as the mastermind of the kidnapping and killing of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl, officials said, after a court Thursday ordered the man's release. The court in the southern city of Karachi ruled that Omar Sheikh be freed from a temporary detention order that had kept him in jail since the same court overturned his conviction in April. The court also directed Thursday that he can't be detained again without its permission, the judgment said. After Thursday's court ruling, it was unclear if Mr. Sheikh, a British national, would actually be set free. The Pakistani authorities have been legally fighting the release since the Karachi court in April set aside the death sentence handed down to Mr. Sheikh for terrorism, kidnapping for ransom, and murder, downgrading it to the lesser crime of kidnapping. As kidnapping carries a maximum of seven years in jail, and Mr. Sheikh had already been locked up for 18 years at that point, he was eligible for release…

30. Indonesia to release radical cleric linked to Bali bombings

https://www.investigativeproject.org/ext/19001
JAKARTA (Reuters) - Indonesia is set to release Islamic cleric Abu Bakar Bashir from jail on Friday, the man who was the suspected mastermind of the 2002 Bali bombings and is among the most notorious extremists in the world's biggest Muslim majority country. The frail-looking Bashir, 82, who is regarded as the spiritual leader of Jemaah Islamiah (JI), a jihadist network with ties to al Qaeda, was jailed in 2011 for 15 years for his links to a militant training camp in Aceh province. After receiving periodic reductions in his jail term, Indonesia's law and human rights ministry has said he has now completed his sentence. Although linked to the Bali attacks that killed 202 people and a 2003 attack on the J.W. Marriott hotel in Jakarta, Bashir was never convicted for them and denied those ties. Zulkarnaen, a man believed to be one of the seniormost members of JI and involved in making the bombs for the attacks, was arrested last month…

After 18 years on the run, an Indonesian terrorist leader who orchestrated the Bali bombings has revealed new secrets after his arrest. Charity boxes in food stalls and mini-marts have been helping to fund radical causes and police believe there could be up to 6000 active members of Jemaah Islamiah in Indonesia. JI is the al-Qaeda-linked group which planned and orchestrated the devastating 2002 Bali nightclub bombings which killed 202 people, as well as a string of other bombings in Indonesia. Indonesian police have revealed that more than 20,000 charity boxes, placed in food stalls, have been used to fund the shady terror group's operations. The boxes have been used to collect cash in 12 regions of Indonesia, across Java and Sumatra, and the food stall owners had no idea the money was going to a terror group. The arrest in November of Aris Sumarsono, known as Zulkarnaen, has thrown a new spotlight on JI and its contemporary incarnation…

BANGKOK — The hard-line Islamic Defenders Front was outlawed by the Indonesian government on Wednesday and ordered to cease all activities less than two months after its fiery leader, Rizieq Shihab, returned from self-imposed exile and pledged to lead a "moral revolution." In a statement signed by top officials and the national police chief, the government said that members of the group had engaged in terrorist and criminal acts and that activities organized by the group had disturbed public order. Mr. Rizieq, 55, a cleric who claims to be descended from the Prophet Muhammad, is accused of violating coronavirus protocols by holding gatherings of thousands of people. He surrendered to the police earlier this month and faces up to six years in prison. Days before his arrest, six of his bodyguards were shot and killed by the police in what the authorities said was self-defense. Mr. Rizieq remains in jail. The order dissolving the group said that its government registration had lapsed last year and that it was no longer a recognized organization. It is now banned from conducting activities and using its logo, a triangular symbol with a star at the center and its name in Indonesian and Arabic lettering…

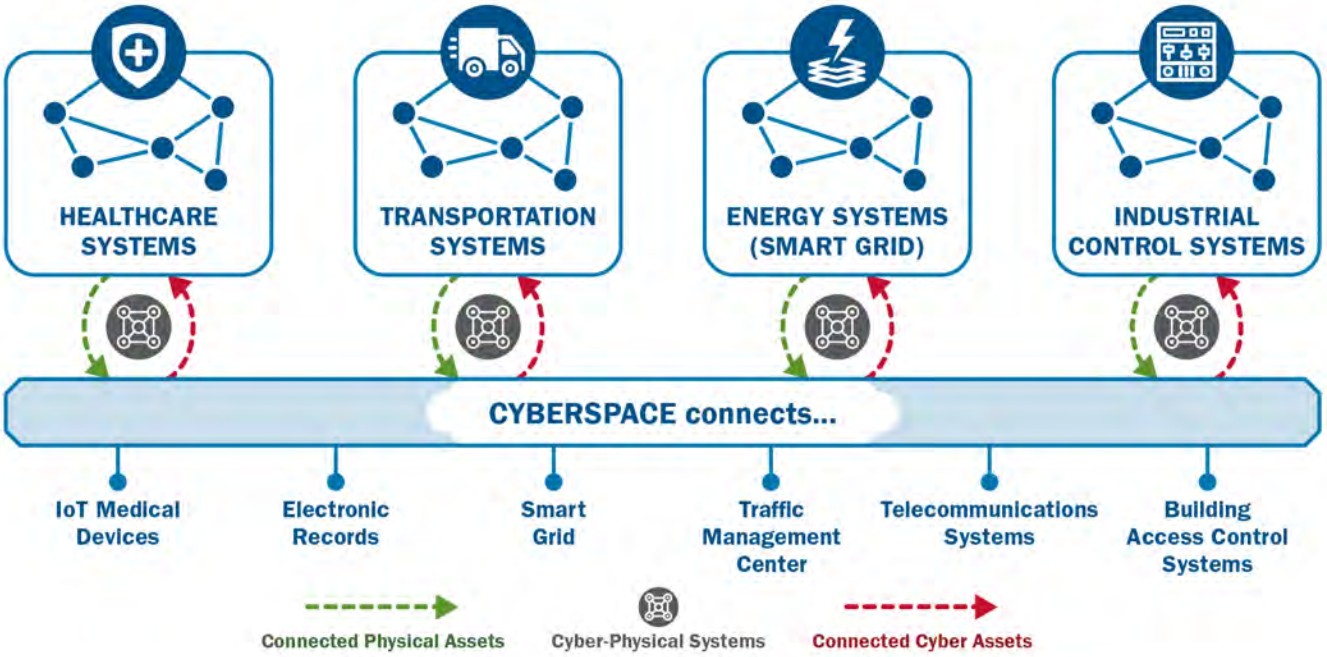
CYBERSECURITY AND PHYSICAL SECURITY CONVERGENCE

A CONNECTED OPERATING ENVIRONMENT

Today's threats are a result of hybrid attacks targeting both physical and cyber assets. The adoption and integration of Internet of Things (IoT) and Industrial Internet of Things (IIoT) devices have led to an increasingly interconnected mesh of cyber-physical systems (CPS), which expands the attack surface and blurs the once clear functions of cybersecurity and physical security. Meanwhile, efforts to build cyber resilience and accelerate the adoption of advanced technologies can also introduce or exacerbate security risks in this evolving threat landscape.

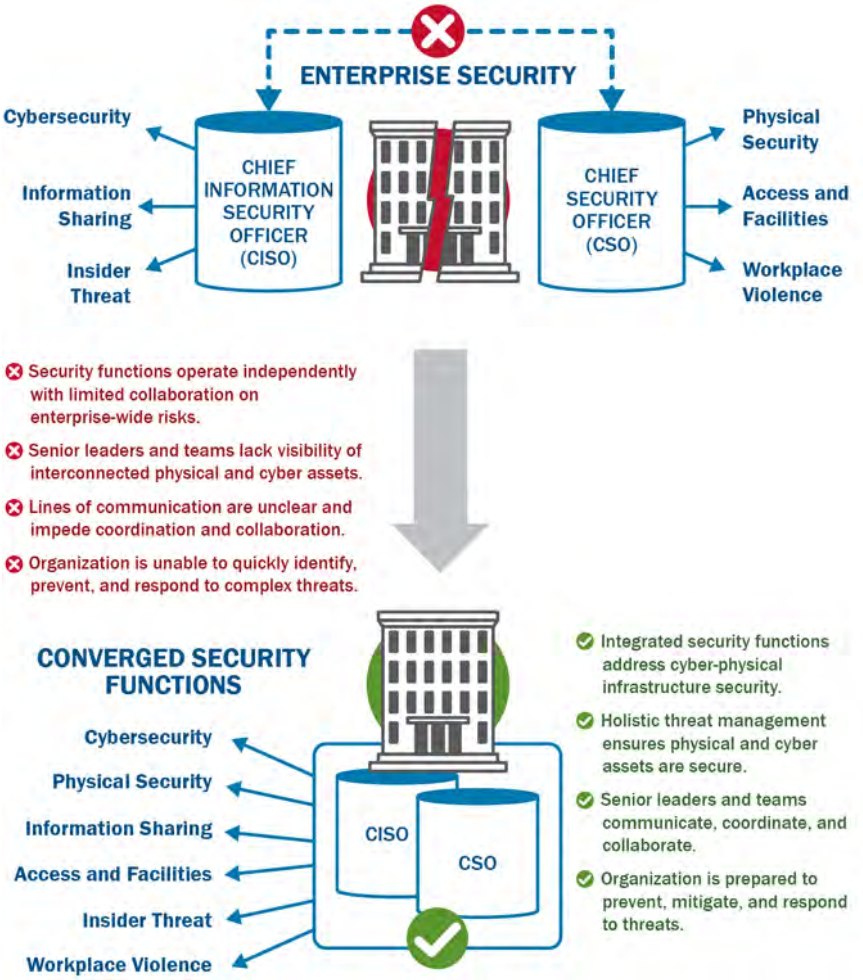


A successful cyber or physical attack on connected industrial control systems (ICS) and networks can disrupt operations or even deny critical services to society. For example:

- A security gap in access controls, such as unauthorized access to facilities or system permissions, can allow an individual to use a universal serial bus (USB) device or other removable hardware to introduce a virus or malware into a network.
- Heating, ventilation, and air conditioning (HVAC) systems can be virtually overridden, causing a rise in temperature that renders network servers inoperable.
- A cyber-attack on telecommunications can impair communication with law enforcement and emergency services, resulting in delayed response times.
- An unmanned aircraft system (UAS) can compromise sensitive information by gaining access to an unsecured network using wireless hacking technology.
- A cyber-attack exploiting healthcare vulnerabilities can compromise sensitive data or cause a connected medical device to malfunction, resulting in injury or loss of life.

ORGANIZATIONAL CHALLENGE: SILOED SECURITY FUNCTIONS

Together, cyber and physical assets represent a significant amount of risk to physical security and cybersecurity—each can be targeted, separately or simultaneously, to result in compromised systems and/or infrastructure. Yet physical security and cybersecurity divisions are often still treated as separate entities. When security leaders operate in these siloes, they lack a holistic view of security threats targeting their enterprise. As a result, attacks are more likely to occur and can lead to impacts such as exposure of sensitive or proprietary information, economic damage, loss of life, and disruption of National Critical Functions (NCFs).[1]



ORGANIZATIONAL SOLUTION: CONVERGED SECURITY FUNCTIONS

Convergence is formal collaboration between previously disjointed security functions. Organizations with converged cybersecurity and physical security functions are more resilient and better prepared to identify, prevent, mitigate, and respond to threats. Convergence also encourages information sharing and developing unified security policies across security divisions.

BENEFITS OF CONVERGENCE

An integrated threat management strategy reflects in-depth understanding of the cascading impacts to interconnected cyber-physical infrastructure. As rapidly evolving technology increasingly links physical and cyber assets—spanning sectors from energy and transportation to agriculture and healthcare—the benefits of converged security functions outweigh the challenges of organizational change efforts and enable a flexible, sustainable strategy anchored by shared security practices and goals:

GETTING STARTED

A culture of inclusivity is vital to successfully converging security functions and fostering communication, coordination, and collaboration. Organizations of all sizes can pursue convergence by developing an approach that is tailored to the organization's unique structure, priorities, and capability level. The guide below provides a flexible framework for developing a holistic security strategy that aligns security functions with organizational priorities and business objectives.

A FRAMEWORK FOR ALIGNING SECURITY FUNCTIONS

COMMUNICATION

Initiate a Dialogue
Enable communication with security leaders. Engage with upper management to discuss what convergence might look like within your organization—successful convergence relies on support from senior leaders.

Review Leadership Roles
Discuss whether your current leadership structure can be realigned.

Establish a Convergence Team
Identify key players, such as CSO, CISO, physical security, IT, cybersecurity, and facility managers.

Enable Information Sharing
Engage with team members across all security functions to identify points of convergence.

COORDINATION

Formalize Convergence Team Roles and Responsibilities
Establish a cadence and structure for team coordination and integration.

Identify Linked Assets
Coordinate with team members across security functions to assess cyber and physical assets and identify those that are linked. Assess the risk level of each asset based on linkages.

Conduct a Vulnerability Assessment
Identify gaps in security and risk mitigation and determine where gaps can be closed through convergence.

Determine the Baseline
Leverage initial assessments and gap analyses to determine the baseline for security operations and incident management.

COLLABORATION

Run the Numbers
Determine if convergence on any scale is financially feasible from a short-term and long-term perspective.

Prioritize Improvements
Identify and prioritize improvements, including patches, software updates, virus protection, and opportunities for automation.

Craft Risk-Driven Policies
Develop and implement risk-driven policies with broad applicability and that reflect converged security functions. Identify best practices.

Strategic Alignment
Align strategy to shared practices and goals. Focus on improving efficiency and increased information sharing.

Not ready to converge? Consider performing a security assessment. If you are unable to perform the assessment internally, seeking out a third-party assessment to identify security vulnerabilities may help identify your ideal path to converged security operations. For information on how CISA can help you, please see below for additional resources.

CONVERGENCE CASE STUDIES

Large Foreign Shipping Company, June 2017 – An indiscriminate state-sponsored cyber-attack unleashed a virus or "worm" that halted operations across hospitals, power companies, airports, banks, and government agencies and crippled the global shipping industry for more than a week. The virus was able to penetrate the network of the world's largest container shipping company through a single computer operating outdated accounting software. Although not the primary target, the company's global systems were quickly paralyzed, corrupting proprietary data and hampering communications. Maritime shipping ground to a halt as the outage isolated 76 ports and 800 vessels carrying millions of tons of cargo. The company's own financial losses exceeded $300 million and the ripple effects on global supply chains included impacts to the U.S. national security supply of vaccines. With total estimated costs in damages exceeding $10 billion, this incident is regarded as one of the most devastating cyber-attacks in recent history.

Large U.S. Energy Company, January 2019 – The company observed an evolving threat landscape and a lack of formal collaboration between physical security and cybersecurity functions, hindering the development of a comprehensive threat management strategy. These siloed operations led to significant financial consequences when an internal probe revealed 127 security violations that ultimately cost the company millions, all stemming from non-compliant security practices and lack of collaboration across organizational units. In response, the company increased oversight; restructured roles; hosted discussion panels on best practices for security and compliance; added resources to manage and implement compliance and security efforts; and updated/enhanced systems to track access and vulnerabilities. As a result, the company saw an improvement in information sharing and collaboration, as well as rapid identification and mitigation of threats.

U.S. Power Grid Operator, March 2019 – One of the first attacks on the U.S. power system occurred when hackers exploited a firmware vulnerability and caused a grid operator's firewalls to continuously reboot, leading to a brief communications outage. The attack led the North American Electric Reliability Corporation (NERC) to issue a series of recommendations, including: applying best practices for vulnerability and patch management; minimizing Internet-facing devices; using virtual private networks (VPNs) and access control lists (ACLs); layering defenses; segmenting and monitoring networks; identifying exploitable vulnerabilities; and employing redundant solutions.

IoT Devices Impacted by Ripple20 Vulnerabilities, June 2020 – A group of 19 vulnerabilities known as Ripple20 impacted millions of connected devices, including smart home devices, power grid equipment, healthcare systems, industrial gear, transportation systems, mobile/satellite communications equipment, and commercial aircraft devices. These high-risk vulnerabilities in critical IoT devices across numerous sectors could lead to compromised data and device malfunctions. In response, some vendors released their own recommendations to mitigate potential risks. The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) issued an alert on potential weaknesses that malicious actors could exploit and provided recommended mitigation approaches, including performing an impact analysis and risk assessment; minimizing network exposure for control system devices and systems; and ensuring access points are updated to the latest software version. Security researchers have identified additional impacted vendors and devices since Ripple20 was initially discovered.

Foreign Terrorist Groups Direct Operatives to Attack US

Foreign terrorist organizations (FTOs) maintain the ability to train operatives to plot external operations in the United States while supporters and affiliates focus on regional conflicts. Since 2019, three FTOs have instructed and supported a foreign national to engage in preoperational planning to conduct an attack in the United States, resulting in one attacker killing three US sailors and wounding eight others before responding officers killed him.

- On December 15, the US Department of Justice charged Cholo Abdi Abdullah, a 30-year-old Kenyan national, with six counts of terrorism-related offenses for plotting to hijack an aircraft and conduct a 9/11-style attack in the United States. Senior leaders of al-Shabaab, a Salafi-jihadist group that supports al-Qa'ida in East Africa, directed Abdullah to obtain pilot training in 2016 in the Philippines and to test flaws in airport security. The group coined the operation, "Jerusalem will never be Judaized," referring to US support for Israel and its embassy moving from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem in May 2018. Abdullah was first arrested in the Philippines in July 2019 on local charges and remained in that country's custody until he was transferred to US law enforcement on December 15, 2020.

Al-Shabaab supporter Cholo Abdi Abdullah was arrested in the Philippines in 2019.

- In February, al-Qa'ida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) released a video claiming responsibility for the attack at a Naval Air Station in Pensacola, Florida, in December 2019. Mohammed Saeed Alshamrani, an officer in the Saudi Air Force participating in a military training program at the base, killed three sailors and wounded eight others after legally purchasing a firearm. Law enforcement revealed in May that Alshamrani was radicalized as far back as 2015, directly associating with several AQAP operatives to plan an attack.

- In July 2019, Alexei Saab, a 42-year-old New Jersey resident, was arrested for his support of Hizballah. While living in the United States, Saab served as a Hizballah operative conducting surveillance of multiple targets in major cities to help the group plot potential future attacks. Prior to entering the United States in 2000 and becoming a naturalized citizen in 2008, Saab joined Hizballah in 1996 in Lebanon, where he observed and reported on the movements of Israeli troops.

Capitol police chief resigns amid criticism over response to violence

Protesters stormed the Capitol building and occupied it for hours

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The head of the U.S. Capitol Police will resign effective Jan. 16 following the breach of the Capitol by a pro-Trump mob.

Chief Steven Sund said Thursday that police had planned for a free speech demonstration and did not expect the violent attack. He said it was unlike anything he'd experienced in his 30 years in law enforcement.

He resigned Thursday after House Speaker Nancy Pelosi called on him to step down. His resignation was confirmed to The Associated Press by a person familiar with the matter who was not authorized to speak publicly.

The breach halted the effort by Congress to certify President-elect Joe Biden's victory. Protesters stormed the building and occupied for hours. The lawmakers eventually returned and finished their work.

US Capitol Police officer dies after riot

Officer Brian D. Sicknick died Thursday due to injuries sustained while on-duty, physically engaging with protesters at the U.S. Capitol

Duty Death: Brian D. Sicknick - [District of Columbia]

End of Service: 01/07/2021

Today at 12:49 AM

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Capitol Police says an officer who was injured after responding to riots at the Capitol has died.

Officer Brian D. Sicknick died Thursday due to injuries sustained while on-duty, physically engaging with protesters at the U.S. Capitol, the statement said.

Supporters of President Donald Trump stormed the Capitol on Wednesday as Congress was tallying the Electoral College votes to confirm Democrat Joe Biden won the election. Sicknick returned to his division office and collapsed, the report said. He was taken to a hospital and later died.

The death will be investigated by the Metropolitan Police Department's Homicide Branch, the USCP, and federal law enforcement. Sicknick joined the Capitol police in 2008.

Democratic leaders of the House Appropriations Committee said the "tragic loss" of a Capitol police officer "should remind all of us of the bravery of the law enforcement officers who protected us, our colleagues, Congressional staff, the press corps and other essential workers" during the hourslong takeover of the Capitol by pro-Trump protesters.

Bangladeshi National Sentenced for Conspiracy to Bring Aliens to the United States

A Bangladeshi national formerly residing in Monterrey, Mexico, was sentenced to 46 months in prison followed by three years of supervised release for his role in a scheme to smuggle aliens from Mexico into the United States.

According to the plea agreement, Moktar Hossain admitted that from March 2017 to August 2018, he conspired to bring, and did bring, Bangladeshi nationals to the United States at the Texas border in exchange for payment. Hossain operated out of Monterrey, Mexico, where he maintained a hotel that housed aliens on their way to the United States. Hossain paid drivers to transport the aliens to the U.S. border, and gave the aliens instructions on how to cross the Rio Grande river.

"The defendant was a key player in an organized smuggling network that operated for profit and preyed on Bangladeshi nationals who wanted to enter the United States illegally," said Acting Assistant Attorney General David P. Burns of the Justice Department's Criminal Division. "This sentence serves as a clear deterrent to participants of such transnational criminal organizations who seek to undermine the security of our borders by illegally facilitating the travel of foreigners into the United States for a financial gain."

"Border security and national security are one in the same," said U.S. Attorney Ryan K. Patrick for the Southern District of Texas. "We must know who is coming into the country, and we cannot allow unfiltered access. My office continues to work with all our partners executing this mission."

"The investigation, prosecution, and sentencing of Hossain is a result of HSI's expertise in transnational investigations and unique ability to coordinate investigative efforts across international boundaries with foreign counterparts," said Special Agent in Charge Shane Folden of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement's Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) San Antonio. "HSI will continue to work with our law enforcement partners both domestic and international to aggressively dismantle criminal travel networks that pose a threat to U.S. national security."

This case was investigated by HSI Laredo, with assistance from the HSI Human Smuggling Unit, HSI Monterrey, HSI Houston, HSI Calexico, U.S. Customs and Border Patrol, U.S. Border Patrol, and the U.S. Marshals Service. The investigation was conducted under the Extraterritorial Criminal Travel Strike Force (ECT) program, a joint partnership between the Justice Department's Criminal Division and HSI. The ECT program focuses on human smuggling networks that may present particular national security or public safety risks, or present grave humanitarian concerns. ECT has dedicated investigative, intelligence and prosecutorial resources. ECT coordinates and receives assistance from other U.S. government agencies and foreign law enforcement authorities.

This case was prosecuted by Trial Attorneys James Hepburn and Erin Cox of the Criminal Division's Human Rights and Special Prosecutions Section with assistance from the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Texas.

Justice Department Announces Civil Investigation into Chemical Restraint Use at Two Nevada Juvenile Facilities

The Justice Department announced today that it has opened an investigation into the use of pepper spray at two juvenile correctional facilities run by the Nevada Juvenile Justice Services Agency: the Nevada Youth Training Center and the Summit View Youth Center. The investigation will examine whether staff at the two facilities use pepper spray in a manner that violates youth's rights under the Constitution.

The department has not reached any conclusions regarding the allegations in this matter. The investigation will be conducted under the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act (CRIPA) and the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act. Both statutes give the department the authority to investigate systemic violations of the constitutional rights of young people in juvenile detention and correctional facilities. The department's work has led to important reforms to protect the rights of young people housed in those facilities.

The Civil Rights Division's Special Litigation Section is conducting this investigation. Individuals with relevant information are encouraged to contact the department via phone at 1- 833-591-0426 or by email at Community.NVJuveniles@usdoj.gov.

Pittsburgh Man Charged with Threatening Communications and Impeding FBI Investigation

PITTSBURGH – Khaled Miah, 27, a resident of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and former student at the University of Pittsburgh, has been charged by federal criminal complaint with one count of making interstate threatening communications, one count of influencing, impeding or retaliating against a Federal law enforcement officer, and one count of destruction of records in a federal investigation, United States Attorney Scott Brady announced today. Miah was arrested on Wednesday and made an initial appearance in U.S. District Court via video teleconference. A preliminary and detention hearing is scheduled for tomorrow, January 8, 2021, at 10 a.m., before Chief Magistrate Judge Cynthia Eddy.

"Khaled Miah's use of multiple Twitter accounts to threaten and harass federal law enforcement officers and their family members and to obstruct a federal investigation are clear violations of federal law," said U.S. Attorney Brady. "We will not hesitate to pursue and prosecute individuals who cross the line from interest to intimidation."

"This arrest is the culmination of a year-long investigation which included threatening federal law enforcement officers," said FBI Pittsburgh Special Agent in Charge Michael Christman. "Threatening online statements, whether directed to a federal officer or any other person, is not harmless activity. It is serious criminal activity with consequences. Threats against law enforcement officers are particularly egregious in that it interferes with our ability to protect the communities we are charged with serving. We should all understand that the First Amendment is not a license to threaten others with harm and that the FBI and our law enforcement partners will relentlessly pursue those who pose a threat to the community."

According to an affidavit filed in U.S. District Court in Pittsburgh, on or about December 27, 2020, Miah posted threats directed at individual FBI agents who were investigating him, as well as the FBI generally. In December 2020, FBI personnel identified a publicly visible Twitter account created by Miah. From the date of its creation to on or about January 1, 2021, Miah used this Twitter account to threaten, intimidate and harass FBI Pittsburgh Agents and the FBI. In addition, after posting the threatening statements, and with full knowledge of the FBI investigation into his conduct, Miah subsequently deleted those posts which impeded, obstructed, and influenced the FBI investigation.

Specifically, as referenced in the criminal complaint, among other statements, Miah posted the following statement on Twitter: "Currently eating pasta and watching videos of the secind plane hit the south tower."

Based upon their lengthy investigation of Miah, the FBI assessed that by referring to watching "videos of the second plane hit the south tower," Miah was referring to the coordinated Al-Qaeda terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, at which time two commercial airplanes were hijacked and crashed into the North and South towers of the World Trade Center in New York City. As a result, the North and South towers ultimately burned and collapsed causing the deaths of more than 2900 people. Miah went on to state that "the deed will be done, at a time which is most opportunistic for me, chosen by myself."

Miah additionally commented on December 29, 2020, that the "zero hour" was approaching and posted the geographic location of FBI Headquarters in Washington, D.C. According to the criminal complaint affidavit, Miah also traveled to Washington, D.C., and was surveilled on at least 11 occasions in the immediate vicinity of the FBI headquarters building in Pittsburgh between November 1, 2020, and January 3, 2021.

The criminal complaint affidavit also details that, after seizing and searching Miah's electronic devices pursuant to a federal search warrant, FBI's forensic analysis revealed that Miah apparently idealized the Boston Marathon Bombers, Tamerlan and Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, and visited several landmarks in Massachusetts associated with the bombings, including where each of the two bombings took place, where the Tsarnaev brothers participated in a violent shootout with local police, and the gym where Tamerlan Tsarnaev previously trained in mixed martial arts.

Members of the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force who were directly involved in this investigation include: FBI, University of Pittsburgh Police Department, Pittsburgh Bureau of Police, Allegheny County Police Department, Allegheny County Port Authority Police, Pennsylvania State Police, Allegheny County Probation, and the Internal Revenue Service – Criminal Investigation.

The case is being prosecuted by Assistant U.S. Attorneys Jessica Lieber Smolar and Soo C. Song of the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Charges pursuant to a criminal complaint are merely allegations, and the defendant is presumed innocent unless and until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in a court of law.

Predicted Heart Age Among Cancer Survivors — United States, 2013–2017

Lia C. Scott, PhD[1]; Quanhe Yang, PhD[2]; Nicole F. Dowling, PhD[1]; Lisa C. Richardson, MD[1]

Approximately 15.5 million cancer survivors were alive in the United States in 2016 with expected growth to 26.1 million by 2040 (1). Cancer survivors are living longer because of advances in early detection and treatment, but face psychosocial, cognitive, financial, and physical challenges (1,2). Physical challenges include cardiovascular complications, partly because cancer and cardiovascular disease (CVD) share some cumulative risk factors including tobacco use, physical inactivity, obesity, poor diet, hypertension, diabetes, and dyslipidemia (3). In addition, many cancer treatments damage the heart, and some cancer types increase risk for developing CVD (4). The recognition and management of heart disease in cancer survivors has given rise to the discipline of cardio-oncology, which focuses on the cardiovascular health of this population (5). CVD risk has been previously estimated using prediction models, and studies suggest that physician-patient communication using predicted heart age rather than predicted 10-year risk has led to a more accurate perception of excess heart age, encouraged actions to adopt a healthy lifestyle, and improved modifiable CVD risk factors (6,7). Using the nonlaboratory-based Framingham Risk Score (FRS) to estimate 10-year risk for developing CVD, predicted heart age is estimated from the 10-year risk of CVD (predicted by age, sex, diabetes status, smoking status, systolic blood pressure, hypertension treatment status, and body mass index); it is the age of an otherwise healthy person with the same predicted risk, with all other risk factors included in the prediction model at the normal level (systolic blood pressure of 125 mmHg, no hypertension treatment, body mass index of 22.5, nonsmoker, and nondiabetic) (6). Using data from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System (BRFSS), this study estimates predicted heart age, excess heart age (difference between predicted heart age and actual age), and racial/ethnic and sociodemographic disparities in predicted heart age among U.S. adult cancer survivors and noncancer participants aged 30–74 years using previously published methods (7). A total of 22,759 men and 46,294 women were cancer survivors with a mean age of 48.7 and 48.3 years, respectively. The predicted heart age and excess heart age among cancer survivors were 57.2 and 8.5 years, respectively, for men and 54.8 and 6.5 years, respectively, for women, and varied by age, race/ethnicity, education and income. The use of predicted heart age by physicians to encourage cancer survivors to improve modifiable risk factors and make heart healthy choices, such as tobacco cessation, regular physical activity, and a healthy diet to maintain a healthy weight, can engage survivors in informed cancer care planning after diagnosis.

Data were drawn from the BRFSS 2013, 2015, and 2017 survey cycles because CVD-specific modules are conducted in odd-numbered years. CDC pooled results for those years to produce stable estimates. The median combined response rate across states for each year was 45.9%, 47.2%, and 45.9%. The eligible sample included nonpregnant adults aged 30–74 years, who had no self-reported history of CVD, including coronary heart disease, myocardial infarction, and stroke. Among 1,362,270 BRFSS participants, the following were excluded: 337,836 participants outside the age range, 3,927 who were pregnant, 103,658 with self-reported CVD, and 70,453 with missing covariates for blood pressure prediction. Among the remaining 846,396 participants for the analysis, 69,053 (8.2%) were cancer survivors. Cancer survivors were defined as having answered "yes" to the question "(Ever told) you had any other type of cancer?" (i.e., excluding skin cancer) by a doctor, nurse, or health professional. Exclusions based on cancer type, which can be found in the cancer survivorship module (https://www.cdc.gov/brfss/questionnaires/pdf-ques/2017_BRFSS_Pub_Ques_508_tagged.pdf), were not made because the survey included that module for only 2017 and did not survey all states.

To account for the complex sampling design, CDC calculated estimates using weights and strata in SAS (version 9.4; SAS Institute) or SAS-callable SUDAAN (version 11.0; RTI International). Systolic blood pressure was calculated using a previously published method (8) with National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey 2011–2012, 2013–2014, and 2015–2016 cycles. Predicted heart age was capped with an upper limit of 100 years (6).

Age-adjusted weighted means, prevalences, and 95% confidence intervals were calculated for actual age, predicted heart age, and excess heart age. Prevalence of excess heart age of ≥5 years was calculated by age group, race/ethnicity, educational attainment, and annual household income stratified by sex and cancer-survivor status. Adjusted differences in predicted heart age for cancer-survivor versus noncancer status and racial/ethnic differences in predicted heart age for cancer survivors were calculated using multivariate linear regression. A t-test across all age groups was used to ascertain differences within categories, and pairwise t-tests were used for education, income, and race/ethnicity.

A total of 22,759 men and 46,294 women were cancer survivors, with mean ages of 48.7 and 48.3 years, respectively. The predicted heart age and excess heart age among cancer survivors were 57.2 and 8.5 years, respectively, for men and 54.8 and 6.5 years, respectively, for women. The prevalence of excess heart age ≥5 years was 52.4% for men and 43.6% for women. Among cancer survivors, groups with the highest average excess heart age were those in which persons were aged 60–74 years, were non-Hispanic Black, had less than a high school education, and had <$35,000 annual household income (excess heart age range = 11.6–14.9 years for men and 9.8–14.0 years for women). Prevalence of excess heart age ≥5 years was highest for those aged 60–74 years among both men and women; excess heart age ≥5 years was 3.0 percentage points higher for men and 6.5 percentage points higher for women among cancer survivors than among noncancer participants (Table 1).

Among men, adjusted difference in excess heart age was higher among lower income cancer survivors and non-Hispanic Black cancer survivors than among noncancer participants. Among women, the adjusted difference in excess heart age decreased with age and was higher among lower education, lower income, non-Hispanic Black, and Hispanic cancer survivors than among noncancer participants (Table 2).

The difference in predicted heart age between Hispanic and non-Hispanic White cancer survivors was small and not statistically significant for most subgroups, as opposed to a much larger and mostly statistically significant difference between Hispanic and non-Hispanic Black survivors. In addition, disparities were larger among female cancer survivors than among male cancer survivors. The adjusted difference in excess heart age between non-Hispanic Black and non-Hispanic White female cancer survivors increased with age, education level, and income (Table 3). Disparities between non-Hispanic Black and non-Hispanic White persons were greater for women (7.4 years) than for men (4.3 years). The largest differences in excess heart age between non-Hispanic

Black and non-Hispanic White women were among those aged 50–59 years (9.2 years) and 60–74 years (8.8 years). Excess heart age differences for each education level were greater for non-Hispanic Black women, with the largest difference occurring for the highest education level (more than high school). Among non-Hispanic Black and non-Hispanic White women with annual household income >$35,000, the difference in excess heart age was 2.4 years higher than that among those with lesser income. Overall, excess heart age is similar among Hispanic and non-Hispanic White cancer survivors, and higher for non-Hispanic Black survivors (Table 3).

Summary

What is already known about this topic?

Cancer and cardiovascular disease (CVD) share long-term risk factors. Physician-patient communication using heart age has been effective in motivating patients to improve modifiable CVD risk factors.

What is added by this report?

The predicted heart age and excess heart age among cancer survivors were 57.2 and 8.5 years, respectively, for men and 54.8 and 6.5 years, respectively, for women, and varied by age, race/ethnicity, education, and income. The prevalence of excess heart age ≥5 years was higher among men, cancer survivors with lower income and lower educational attainment, and non-Hispanic Black cancer survivors, particularly women.

What are the implications for public health practice?

Health care providers should counsel cancer survivors about ways to reduce modifiable shared risk factors such as tobacco use, physical inactivity, poor diet, hypertension, and obesity that contribute to excess heart age.

Discussion

In this study, both excess heart age and prevalence of excess heart age ≥5 years were higher among cancer survivors than among noncancer participants. Consistent with previous findings, the prevalence of excess heart age was larger among men than among women; however, racial disparities among women were larger than those among men (7).

This study also confirms previous findings that few adults meet ideal cardiovascular health metrics, such as not smoking, having normal body mass index, being physically active, eating a healthy diet, and having normal levels of total cholesterol and blood pressure, resulting in excess heart age ≥5 years (9). As cancer survivors live longer, more attention can be focused on modifiable risk factors that affect both cancer and CVD (1,2,5). In this study, the prevalence of excess heart age ≥5 years was higher among the following groups: men, cancer survivors with lower income and lower educational attainment, and non-Hispanic Black cancer survivors, particularly women. The findings indicate that wellness plans for all cancer survivors, and particularly the most affected groups, should include a focus on cardiovascular risk.

The findings in this report are subject to at least six limitations. First, BRFSS data are self-reported and thus are subject to recall and social desirability biases (10), which might underestimate predicted heart age in all persons. Second, the predicted heart age calculation used model-estimated systolic blood pressure rather than measured systolic blood pressure, which might introduce bias in predicted heart age estimates (7). Third, the nonlaboratory-based FRS used in the study might overestimate predicted heart age compared with the laboratory-based FRS (7). Fourth, several lifestyle choices such as sodium consumption, physical activity, and diet are not included in the FRS heart age calculation (7). Physical activity and diet are specifically linked to both heart disease and cancer, and their exclusion is likely to cause underestimates of predicted heart age in cancer survivors. Fifth, specific risks for some cancer survivors such as cardiotoxic treatment are not considered in the model and are likely to result in further underestimates. Finally, the definition of cancer in this study was nonspecific and could result in misclassification of some study participants.

Adult cancer survivors aged 30–74 years had higher predicted heart age than did noncancer participants, and the degree of excess heart age varied by racial/ethnic and sociodemographic groups. Cancer survivors are living longer and are more likely to experience long-term side effects from therapy that require treatment from multiple types of physicians (5). The management of cardiovascular complications and involvement of cardiologists in the integrated approach of cardio-oncology is becoming more important given the steady increase in cancer survival, and the literature suggests the use of a low threshold for referral to a cardio-oncologist or cardiologist (4,5). The use of predicted heart age by physicians to encourage cancer survivors to improve modifiable risk factors and make heart-healthy choices, such as tobacco cessation, regular physical activity, and a healthy diet to maintain a healthy weight, can engage survivors in informed cancer care planning after diagnosis. In addition, physicians can consider additional components and complications of cancer survivorship, such as mental, social, and financial issues, when formulating a survivorship plan. Cancer survivors might experience numerous macro-level challenges and barriers, which can be included in future analyses to determine potential effect on heart age. By determining and communicating predicted heart age of cancer survivors at a personal level, cancer care teams can provide education to prevent long-term cardiovascular complications and improve quality of life and heart outcomes for cancer survivors.

Time from Start of Quarantine to SARS-CoV-2 Positive Test Among Quarantined College and University Athletes — 17 States, June–October 2020

To safely resume sports, college and university athletic programs and regional athletic conferences created plans to mitigate transmission of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19). Mitigation measures included physical distancing, universal masking, and maximizing outdoor activity during training; routine testing; 10-day isolation of persons with COVID-19; and 14-day quarantine of athletes identified as close contacts* of persons with confirmed COVID-19. Regional athletic conferences created testing and quarantine policies based on National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) guidance (1); testing policies varied by conference, school, and sport. To improve compliance with quarantine and reduce the personal and economic burden of quarantine adherence, the quarantine period has been reduced in several countries from 14 days to as few as 5 days with testing (2) or 10 days without testing (3). Data on quarantined athletes participating in NCAA sports were used to characterize COVID-19 exposures and assess the amount of time between quarantine start and first positive SARS-CoV-2 test result. Despite the potential risk for transmission from frequent, close contact associated with athletic activities (4), more athletes reported exposure to COVID-19 at social gatherings (40.7%) and from roommates (31.7%) than they did from exposures associated with athletic activities (12.7%). Among 1,830 quarantined athletes, 458 (25%) received positive reverse transcription–polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) test results during the 14-day quarantine, with a mean of 3.8 days from quarantine start (range = 0–14 days) until the positive test result. Among athletes who had not received a positive test result by quarantine day 5, the probability of having a positive test result decreased from 27% after day 5 to <5% after day 10. These findings support new guidance from CDC (5) in which different options are provided to shorten quarantine for persons such as collegiate athletes, especially if doing so will increase compliance, balancing the reduced duration of quarantine against a small but nonzero risk for postquarantine transmission. Improved adherence to mitigation measures (e.g., universal masking, physical distancing, and hand hygiene) at all times could further reduce exposures to SARS-CoV-2 and disruptions to athletic activities because of infections and quarantine (1,6).

CDC partnered with representatives of the NCAA conferences to analyze retrospective data collected by participating colleges and universities. A request for participation was sent to all NCAA members regardless of whether athletics programs had resumed. Colleges and universities were provided with a data dictionary to standardize data collection (Supplementary Table, https://stacks.cdc.gov/view/cdc/99431). Deidentified, individual-level retrospective testing and exposure data from quarantined, SARS-CoV-2–exposed collegiate athletes across the United States were provided to CDC for analysis. Information on the types of exposure was collected by athletic staff members or public health professionals and categorized as sports settings (e.g., game, practice, team workouts, scrimmage, shared equipment, or team travel), roommate, social gatherings (e.g., party, shared car, or friends), unspecified or other (e.g., class, meetings, work, or travel unrelated to sports). Data cleaning and analyses were conducted in duplicate using SAS (version 9.4; SAS Institute) and R (version 3.6.3; The R Foundation). This activity was reviewed by CDC and was conducted consistent with applicable federal law and CDC policy.†

For this analysis, athletes were excluded if they 1) had not received testing using RT-PCR during their 14-day quarantine period; 2) had received a positive SARS-CoV-2 RT-PCR test result before starting quarantine; 3) were still under quarantine and had not had positive test results at the time of data submission (October 27–November 17); or 4) were missing data on quarantine start date, test date, test type (i.e., antigen or RT-PCR), or RT-PCR test result (positive, negative, or indeterminate). For all athletes who received a positive SARS-CoV-2 RT-PCR test result during quarantine, time-to-event analyses were conducted by separately calculating the interval from the exposure date or the quarantine start date to the positive specimen collection date. Quarantined athlete data were excluded from time-to-event analyses if the exposure date or the quarantine start date was missing or if the athlete had positive test results >14 days after commencing quarantine. Kaplan-Meier survival analysis estimated the probability and 95% confidence intervals (CIs) of athletes receiving a first positive SARS-CoV-2 RT-PCR test result after days 5, 7, and 10 of quarantine.

* Close contact is defined as being <6 feet apart for >15 minutes with an infected person.

Twenty-four colleges and universities contributed data on 2,257 quarantined athletes, irrespective of test result; data from 427 athletes were excluded based on the described exclusion criteria. Among the remaining 1,830 quarantined athletes, the most common sports played were football (46.2%, 846), track and field or cross-country (10.4%, 190), and soccer (6.6%, 121) (Table). The most commonly reported exposures were at social gatherings (40.7%, 745) or from roommates (31.7%, 580); overall, 232 (12.7%) quarantined athletes reported exposure associated with athletic activities. Athletes received a total of 3,345 RT-PCR tests (mean = 1.8 per athlete, range = 1–14) while in quarantine. A total of 458 (25.0%) quarantined athletes ever received a positive test result, including 137 (29.9%) who never reported symptoms. Among 386 quarantined athletes who became symptomatic, 321 (83.2%) ever received a positive test result.

Three colleges and universities contributed data only on quarantined athletes who received positive test results during quarantine (193); after exclusion of 31 who did not meet inclusion criteria, 162 athletes remained. Therefore, a total of 620 athletes with positive SARS-CoV-2 test results during quarantine were included in a time-to-event analysis. Among 436 (73.4%) of these athletes with available exposure date, quarantine commenced a mean of 1.1 days after reported exposure (range = 0–11 days). Among these athletes, 302 (48.7%) reported symptoms before collection of the specimen that returned positive; the mean interval from symptom onset to positive specimen collection date was 1.1 days (range = 0–12 days). Among the 620 athletes with positive test results, the positive test results occurred by day 2 of quarantine for 303 (48. 9%) (Figure 1) and by day 5 for 453 (73.1%) with a mean of 3.8 days from quarantine start (range 0–14 days) until the positive test (Supplementary Figure, https://stacks.cdc.gov/view/cdc/99765). Among all SARS-CoV-2 RT-PCR tests administered, the positivity rate decreased over the quarantine period (Figure 2). The median interval between the start of quarantine and collection of a positive specimen was 2 days (range = 0–14 days). Among those whose test results remained negative at day 5, the estimated probability of having a positive test result was 26.9% (95% CI = 23.7–30.7) after day 5, 14.2% (95% CI = 11.7–17.2) after day 7, and 4.7% (95% CI = 3.3–6.7) after day 10. Among the 29 athletes who received positive test results during days 11–14, 26 (89.7%) had not been tested previously during their quarantine period.

Discussion

A positive SARS-CoV-2 test result was received by one quarter of quarantined athletes during June–October 2020. Once an athlete entered quarantine, the probability of a positive test result among those who had no previous positive test result decreased from 27% after day 5 to <5% after day 10. New shortened quarantine options (after day 10 without testing or after day 7 with negative test result) were based on decreasing transmission risk over the duration of quarantine (5). Findings from this investigation support shortened quarantine options for collegiate athletes, given the low proportion of athletes who had positive test results after day 10.

Multiple, concurrent mitigation measures can effectively lower the risk for SARS-CoV-2 transmission (7). The majority of exposures among these athletes occurred at social gatherings and from roommates, indicating that the implementation of targeted mitigation measures helped minimize exposures associated with athletic activities. These findings underscore the need for adherence to mitigation measures (e.g., universal masking, physical distancing, and hand hygiene) at all times to reduce the risk for transmission of SARS-CoV-2 (1,6). In this cohort of collegiate athletes, fewer than one half who ultimately had a positive test result had symptoms consistent with COVID-19 before collection of the positive specimen. This finding is consistent with recent reports of asymptomatic screening programs in general university campus populations, where 51% of students with positive test results were asymptomatic (8). In this study, 86% of quarantined athletes who ever had positive test results did so by day 7, which is consistent with a reported median incubation period of 4.3–6.4 days (9,10).

The findings in this report are subject to at least five limitations. First, almost all athletes who had a positive specimen collected after quarantine day 10 had not been tested previously during quarantine. It is possible that those athletes might have had positive test results before day 10. Second, time-to-event analyses used quarantine start date rather than exposure date because more data were missing on exposure date than on quarantine start date; also, using exposure date was subject to validation errors. Therefore, using the quarantine start date rather than exposure date likely resulted in conservative estimates of the probability of receiving positive test results in quarantine. Third, adherence with quarantine was not assessed, and quarantined athletes possibly had additional exposures leading to infection during the 14-day quarantine. This might explain positive specimens collected after day 10 and could have overestimated the probability of a positive test result after day 10. Fourth, the data relied on self-reported exposure type. Although data were validated by case investigation and contact tracing efforts, 8.1% of athletes reported unspecified exposures, and 3.5% reported multiple exposures. Finally, this study was undertaken in a population of young, healthy athletes undergoing frequent testing. The findings might not be generalizable to other settings and populations.

Data from this report support CDC's guidance on quarantine options shorter than 14 days, with the caveat that a small residual increased risk for transmission remains with a shortened quarantine period. Persons released from quarantine before 14 days should continue daily symptom monitoring, avoid close contact and wear masks when around others. Adherence to quarantine is a known challenge (5) and reducing the duration of quarantine might improve adherence at a population level. Transmission of SARS-CoV-2 can be reduced through a multipronged application of evidence-based mitigation strategies (7), including within large congregate and crowded settings found at colleges and universities. Adherence to mitigation measures during athletic and nonathletic activities is important to protect collegiate athletes from SARS-CoV-2, lessen disruptions in play because of quarantine and isolation protocols, and reduce transmission to others in the community.

Summary

What is already known about this topic?

Quarantine after SARS-CoV-2 exposure is critical to preventing transmission. A 14-day quarantine can prevent further transmission but might be challenging to maintain.

What is added by this report?

Among collegiate athletes exposed to COVID-19, one quarter had positive test results during quarantine. Among athletes who had not received a positive test result by day 5, the probability of testing positive decreased from 27% after day 5 to <5% after day 10.

What are the implications for public health practice?

Among young, healthy athletes, the probability of receiving positive test results after day 10 of quarantine is low. A shorter quarantine after COVID-19 exposure could increase adherence but still poses a small residual risk for transmission.

Assessment of Day-7 Postexposure Testing of Asymptomatic Contacts of COVID-19 Patients to Evaluate Early Release from Quarantine — Vermont, May–November 2020

Amanda Jones, MPH[1]; Veronica Fialkowski, MPH[1]; Lauren Prinzing, MPH[1]; Jeffrey Trites, MS[1]; Patsy Kelso, PhD[1]; Mark Levine, MD[1]

On May 8, 2020, the Vermont Department of Health (VDH) issued a Health Update* recommending shortening the duration of quarantine for persons exposed to SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19). Exposed persons who were in quarantine could be tested by polymerase chain reaction (PCR) on or after quarantine day 7. Those who had remained asymptomatic throughout quarantine and who received a negative SARS-CoV-2 PCR test result on or after day 7 could end quarantine. This policy was based on a report suggesting that symptom onset occurs within this time frame in approximately three quarters of COVID-19 cases (1) and on consultation of the Vermont Health Commissioner with the U.S. Surgeon General. VDH implemented this policy to minimize restrictions on state residents, recognizing that some reduction could occur in the prevention benefit of quarantine to contain the spread of SARS-CoV-2. State-run SARS-CoV-2 testing sites were made available to increase access to no-cost testing and facilitate implementation of this policy. During August 1–December 1, among persons seeking testing at a VDH SARS-CoV-2 testing site, 36% stated that their reason for seeking testing was to end quarantine early (VDH, unpublished data, December 7, 2020), indicating that persons were aware of and following the policy and using the testing services provided. To assess the effectiveness of this policy, VDH analyzed testing data for contacts of persons with a COVID-19 diagnosis. During May 8–November 16, VDH identified 8,798 exposed contacts of COVID-19 patients; 3,983 (45%) had sought testing within 14 days of their exposure, with day 0 defined as the date of last exposure noted in the case investigation record. Among these persons, 2,200 (55%) who received testing on days 7–10 were included in this analysis; 977 (44.9%) of these contacts had a specimen collected for testing on day 7. Among these, 34 (3%) had test results that were positive, 940 (96%) had results that were negative, and three (<1%) had results that were indeterminate (Table). Among the 34 contacts who received a positive SARS-CoV-2 PCR test result on day 7 after exposure, 12 (35%) were asymptomatic. The remaining 22 contacts with positive test results were symptomatic at the time of testing; approximately one half had developed symptoms on days 4–7 after exposure. Among the 940 contacts who received negative test results on specimens collected on day 7 after exposure, 154 (16%) had a subsequent test within the next 7 days (i.e., days 8–14); among these, 152 (99%) had tests that remained negative, and two (1%) had results that were indeterminate.

Indeterminate§	2 (1)	1 (1)

* The quarantine period begins with the date of last exposure to a person with a positive test result for SARS-CoV-2.
† Percentage of all persons tested.
§ Percentage of persons retested.

In addition to the 977 persons who received testing on day 7 after exposure, 1,223 (55.1% of all contacts tested on days 7–10 postexposure) had a specimen collected for SARS-CoV-2 PCR testing on day 8, 9, or 10. Among those persons, 53 (4%) had test results that were positive, 1,159 (95%) had results that were negative, and 11 (1%) had results that were indeterminate. Among the 53 contacts who received a positive SARS-CoV-2 PCR result on specimens collected days 8–10 after exposure, 12 (23%) were asymptomatic (mean time since symptom onset = 6 days). Among the 1,170 contacts who received a negative or indeterminate test result on specimens collected on days 8–10 after exposure, 108 (9%) had a subsequent specimen tested; 107 (99%) remained negative, and one (1%) had a result that was indeterminate. Therefore, among all 2,200 contacts tested on days 7–10 after exposure, 87 (4%) persons had a positive test result, 24 (28%) of whom were asymptomatic.

The findings in this report are subject to at least three limitations. First, this analysis was conducted on a convenience sample that included only positive test results received electronically or by fax and negative test results received electronically. Negative test results that were received by fax were not entered into the surveillance system and so are not included in this analysis. Second, the limited demographic data on contacts of patients could hamper the matching of a contact with a laboratory result; thus, the number of contacts tested might be underreported. Although persons who were retested remained negative (1% indeterminate), they represented only 16% of the total number of persons who discontinued quarantine. Finally, asymptomatic status during quarantine until the time of testing for persons testing negative could not be verified.

These results indicate that among the persons in quarantine who tested negative at day 7 after exposure, none who were retested between day 8 and 14 were positive. Allowing asymptomatic persons to shorten quarantine with a negative test at day 7 or later has not been demonstrated to result in transmission of SARS-CoV-2, indicating that the policy has been effective. These results also indicate that 3.9% of contacts tested on days 7–10 after exposure were infected with SARS-CoV-2. In addition to reducing the duration of quarantine for exposed contacts, Vermont's policy might have provided additional benefits to the state's pandemic response by identifying some asymptomatic patients earlier in the course of their illness through enhancing statewide surveillance testing of an exposed group. This assessment supports Vermont's policy as being effective and offers data to support recommendations to shorten quarantine with testing such as those provided in CDC's updated quarantine guidance.[†]

Opening of Large Institutions of Higher Education and County-Level COVID-19 Incidence — United States, July 6–September 17, 2020

Andrew J. Leidner, PhD[1]; Vaughn Barry, PhD[1]; Virginia B. Bowen, PhD[1]; Rachel Silver, MPH[1]; Trieste Musial, MS[2]; Gloria J. Kang, PhD[1]; Matthew D. Ritchey, DPT[3]; Kelly Fletcher, MPH[2]; Lisa Barrios, DrPH[1]; Eric Pevzner, PhD[1]

During early August 2020, county-level incidence of coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) generally decreased across the United States, compared with incidence earlier in the summer (1); however, among young adults aged 18–22 years, incidence increased (2). Increases in incidence among adults aged ≥60 years, who might be more susceptible to severe COVID-19–related illness, have followed increases in younger adults (aged 20–39 years) by an average of 8.7 days (3). Institutions of higher education (colleges and universities) have been identified as settings where incidence among young adults increased during August (4,5). Understanding the extent to which these settings have affected county-level COVID-19 incidence can inform ongoing college and university operations and future planning. To evaluate the effect of large colleges or universities and school instructional format* (remote or in-person) on COVID-19 incidence, start dates and instructional formats for the fall 2020 semester were identified for all not-for-profit large U.S. colleges and universities (≥20,000 total enrolled students). Among counties with large colleges and universities (university counties) included in the analysis, remote-instruction university counties (22) experienced a 17.9% decline in mean COVID-19 incidence during the 21 days before through 21 days after the start of classes (from 17.9 to 14.7 cases per 100,000), and in-person instruction university counties (79) experienced a 56.2% increase in COVID-19 incidence, from 15.3 to 23.9 cases per 100,000. Counties without large colleges and universities (nonuniversity counties) (3,009) experienced a 5.9% decline in COVID-19 incidence, from 15.3 to 14.4 cases per 100,000. Similar findings were observed for percentage of positive test results and hotspot status (i.e., increasing among in-person–instruction university counties). In-person instruction at colleges and universities was associated with increased county-level COVID-19 incidence and percentage test positivity. Implementation of increased mitigation efforts at colleges and universities could minimize on-campus COVID-19 transmission.

The National Center for Educational Statistics' Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (6) was used to identify not-for-profit baccalaureate degree–granting colleges and universities enrolling ≥20,000 full-time and part-time students. Colleges and universities that enrolled <20,000 students or were considered for-profit were excluded. Fall class start dates and instructional formats on the first day of scheduled classes were abstracted from college and university websites during early September 2020. Counties with large colleges and universities were assigned the start date and instructional format of the school. If a county contained multiple large colleges or universities with different start dates, the earliest start date and corresponding instructional format was assigned. If a county contained multiple large schools with the same start date but different instructional formats, then in-person instruction was assigned. Among 133 counties with large colleges and universities (university counties),† the 101 (76%) in which classes started from July 27 to August 28 were included in the analysis (i.e., 32 were excluded because they included institutions that started on or after August 29 and had insufficient data for the 21 days after the start of classes at the time of analysis). County-level mean estimates of COVID-19 incidence,§ testing rates, percentage test positivity,¶ and hotspot status were compared for university counties with remote-instruction, in-person–instruction, and nonuniversity counties during the 21 days before and after the start of classes.

* Instructional format was assigned based on the advertised method of instruction for the first day of fall 2020 classes. "Remote" format was defined as an instructional format that appeared to minimize in-person classwork on campus. This definition did allow in-person instruction for a very select number of students, including those in laboratory courses, studio courses, or courses for small groups of students with specific instructional needs. In contrast, the "in-person" format was defined for all other colleges and universities that were not considered remote, which included any instructional format that did not appear to minimize in-person classwork on campus. "Hybrid" instructional formats that had reduced, but reoccurring, in-class experiences for many college and university courses (i.e., beyond laboratory and studio courses) were considered "in-person" for this study. The assignment of instructional format was based on the advertised method of instruction and was not based on the college or university policy toward on-campus housing; therefore colleges and universities with remote instruction could have allowed students to stay in on-campus housing.

† A total of 149 large colleges and universities were identified across 133 counties.

§ Incidence was calculated using COVID-19 case counts from state and county health department websites compiled by USAFacts (https://usafacts.org/).

¶ County-level testing rates and rates of percentage positivity represent viral COVID-19 laboratory diagnostic and screening test (RT-PCR) results and exclude antibody and antigen tests. COVID-19 Electronic Laboratory Reporting state health department-reported data are used to describe county-level RT-PCR result totals when information is available on patients' county of residence or health care providers' practice location. HHS Protect laboratory data (provided directly to the federal government from public health laboratories, hospital laboratories, and commercial laboratories) are used otherwise. Total RT-PCR tests reflect the number of tests performed, not the number of persons receiving testing. RT-PCR test positivity rate is the number of positive tests divided by the total number of tests performed and for which results were available.

For all analyses, mean county population size, full-time student enrollment size, urban-rural classifications (large central metro, large fringe metro, medium metro, small metro, micropolitan, and noncore), and COVID-19 outcomes are reported and stratified by county university status and instructional format. The COVID-19 outcomes included incidence and testing rates per 100,000 population, test positivity by SARS-CoV-2 reverse transcription–polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) testing, and the percentage of counties identified as hotspots for ≥1 day during the observation periods. COVID-19 outcomes were reported as means for the 21 days before and after the class start date. Absolute differences (i.e., percentage point differences) are described for percentage-based measures (test positivity and hotspot detection) and relative changes described for rate-based measures (testing rate and incidence). Seven-day moving averages for testing rates, percentage test positivity, and incidence are presented as trends over the observation period (day –21 to day +21). In an unmatched analysis, remote-instruction and in-person instruction university counties were compared with nonuniversity counties. Nonuniversity counties were assigned the median start date of university counties. In the matched analysis, in-person–instruction university counties were matched with nonuniversity counties based on geographic proximity and population size. This analysis of 68 matched pairs was conducted to account for differences in population size, urbanicity, and geographic location between university and nonuniversity counties.[††] Nonuniversity counties in the matched sample were assigned the start date of their matched university-county counterpart. In the matched analysis, a regression-based difference-in-difference approach[§§] was used to quantify the impact of in-person instruction on COVID-19 incidence, with and without adjustment for transient student populations,[¶¶] and percentage test positivity. A sensitivity analysis was conducted to explore whether students' early return to campus might affect observed changes using day –7 as the demarcation between before and after periods. Statistical significance was set at $\alpha = 0.05$. Analyses were conducted using R statistical software (version 4.0.2; The R Foundation).

Among 101 university counties (3.2% of all U.S. counties, accounting for 29.4% of the U.S. population), instructional format was remote for 22 (22%) and in-person for 79 (78%). University counties had higher mean population size and were more urban than were nonuniversity counties (Table). Before the start of school, COVID-19 testing rates at the county-level were already higher in university counties than in nonuniversity counties (Figure). Comparing the time from the start of classes through day 21 with the 21 days before classes began, mean daily testing increased 4.2% and 14.1% among remote instruction and in-person instruction university counties, respectively, and decreased 1.0% among nonuniversity counties. Mean test positivity decreased among remote-instruction university counties (absolute change = –1.8%) and nonuniversity counties (–0.6%) but increased among in-person instruction university counties (1.1%). Incidence decreased in nonuniversity counties (–5.9%) and remote-instruction counties (–17.9%), whereas, incidence increased in in-person (56.2%) university counties. The percentage of counties identified at least once as a hotspot

 Hotspot , or rapid riser, counties met all four of the following criteria, relative to the date assessed: 1) >100 new COVID-19 cases in the most recent 7 days; 2) an increase in the most recent 7-day COVID-19 incidence over the preceding 7-day incidence; 3) a decrease of no more than 60% or an increase in the most recent 3-day COVID-19 incidence over the preceding 3-day incidence; and 4) a ratio of 7-day incidence to 30-day incidence exceeding 0.31. In addition, hotspots must have met at least one of the following criteria: 1) >60% change in the most recent 3-day COVID-19 incidence or 2) >60% change in the most recent 7-day incidence. CDC and other federal agencies that are monitoring trends in COVID-19 are collaborating to refine approaches to define and monitor hotspots. As a result, terminology or definitions used in future reports might differ from those used in this report.

†† Matches for each in-person university county were identified by listing all candidate (county) matches without large colleges or universities that had a similar population size (± 30%) and that were located within 500 miles (805 km) of each university county. From these candidate matches, the final match was selected based on closest proximity such that no nonuniversity county was matched more than once. After matching, the average distance between counties in matched in-person university county and nonuniversity county pairs was 114 miles (183 km) with a maximum distance of 471 miles (758 km). Eleven in-person university counties were excluded from the matched analysis because there were no candidate matches meeting population size and proximity specifications. All remote university counties were excluded from the matched analysis because there were an insufficient number of nonuniversity county matches.

§§ Difference-in-difference is a statistical technique that compares the changes in outcomes over time between two groups: those who are part of a control group and those who are part of a treatment or an intervention group. In this analysis, the intervention group was considered to be the counties with colleges and universities that had in-person instruction and the control group was considered to be nonuniversity counties. Difference-in-difference estimates used a regression model with the following specification: $Y_{ct} = \alpha + \beta_1 \cdot \text{In Person}_{ct} + \beta_2 \cdot \text{After}_{ct} + \delta_{IP} \cdot \text{After}_{ct} \cdot \text{In person}_{ct} + \theta_c + \theta_s + \theta_{week} + \theta_{weekday} + \varepsilon_{ct}$, where Y_{ct} is the outcome of interest (i.e., either COVID-19 incidence or percentage test positivity) for each county c and each unit of time t (days); In Person_{ct} is an indicator equal to 1 if the county has a college or university that started classes in an in-person format; After_{ct} is an indicator equal to 1 for all the days after the county's assigned start date (i.e., an indicator equal to 1 for days 0 to 21, where day 0 is the start date); θ_c and θ_s are county- and state-level fixed effects; θ_{week} and $\theta_{weekday}$ are fixed effects for each calendar week and each weekday; and ε_{ct} is the unobserved error term. The coefficient of interest is δ_{IP}, which captures the difference in outcome before and after the start date among in-person university counties, minus the difference in outcome before and after the assigned start date in nonuniversity counties. Standard errors were clustered at the county level. A placebo test was conducted where the college or university start date used day –21 as the demarcation of before and after periods, and no violation of the parallel trends assumption was found.

¶¶ Because transient student populations might not be included in the population denominator for county incidence estimates, incidence is assessed two ways in the difference-in-difference models: first using county population reported by the U.S. census, then adjusting for student influx by adding full-time student enrollment to each college or university's county population for the period after classes start. The full-time student population was used for this adjustment instead of the total student population, which includes full-time and part-time students.

* 133 counties had institutions of higher education (large colleges or universities). Some counties (n = 32; 24%) opened on or after August 29 and were excluded from analysis. University counties are defined as counties with a large college or university. Nonuniversity counties are defined as counties without a large college or university.

† University counties matched to geographically proximate comparison counties with similar population size. Matches for each university county were identified by first listing all candidate (county) matches without large colleges and universities (nonuniversity counties) that had a similar population size (± 30%) and that were located within 500 miles (805 km) of each university county. From these candidate matches the final match was selected based on closest proximity. § Colleges and universities were included in the analysis if they had ≥20,000 total enrolled students, which included full-time and part-time students. The full-time student enrollments from these included institutions were combined across each university county. The number of full-time student enrollments in the university counties ranged from 11,774 to 192,173.

§ University counties with in-person instruction versus nonuniversity counties (68 matched pairs). Matches for each in-person university county were identified by listing all candidate (county) matches without large colleges or universities that had a similar population size (± 30%) and that were located within 500 miles (805 km) of each university county. From these candidate matches, the final match was selected based on closest proximity such that no nonuniversity county was matched more than once. After matching, the average distance between counties in matched in-person university county and nonuniversity county pairs was 114 miles (183 km) with a maximum distance of 471 miles (758 km). Eleven in-person university counties were excluded from the matched analysis because there were no candidate matches meeting population size and proximity specifications. All remote university counties were excluded from the matched analysis because there was an insufficient number of nonuniversity county matches.

increased for all three groups, with the highest percentage observed in in-person instruction university counties (30.4% absolute increase), followed by remote-instruction university counties (9.1%) and nonuniversity counties (1.5%).

COVID-19 outcomes were similar in the matched analysis. Compared with nonuniversity counties, in-person instruction university counties experienced a higher relative change in testing rates (18.8% versus –5.6%), a higher absolute change in test positivity (1.6% versus –0.8%), a higher relative change in incidence (78.3% versus –19.5%) (Table) (Figure), and a higher absolute change in the percentage identified as hotspots (33.8% versus 1.5%). Based on the difference-in-difference analysis, university counties with in-person instruction were associated with an increase of 14.4 cases per 100,000 ($p<0.05$) and an increase of 2.4 percent test positivity ($p<0.05$) relative to nonuniversity counties with in-person instruction. When adjusting incidence for the influx of full-time students, in-person instruction university counties were associated with an increase of 10.6 cases per 100,000 ($p<0.05$) (Supplementary Table, https://stacks.cdc.gov/view/cdc/99533). These results did not change meaningfully in the sensitivity analysis.

Discussion

County-level COVID-19 incidence decreased in much of the United States in late summer 2020. Comparing the 21 days before and after instruction start dates, university counties with in-person instruction experienced a 56% increase in incidence and 30% increase in hotspot occurrence as well as increases in COVID-19-related testing and test percentage positivity. Results from the unmatched analysis were consistent with those from the matched analysis. If percentage positivity had been stable or declining across the observation period, then efforts on the part of many colleges and universities to conduct or require testing before students' return to campus and their ongoing surveillance efforts might explain an increase in case counts, as a result of increased case discovery. However, the concurrent increases in percentage positivity and in incidence in these counties suggest that higher levels of transmission, in addition to increased case discovery, occurred in these communities (2).

The findings in this report are subject to at least six limitations. First, data abstraction for schools' instructional formats was conducted in early September and focused on identifying the format used on the first day of classes; some misclassification of instructional format might have occurred because of changes during the first few weeks of instruction. Second, this study did not adjust for mitigation strategies (e.g., mask and social distancing requirements and limits on large crowds and athletic events) implemented at local or state levels or at colleges and universities, which could have affected the association between the institution's opening and county-level incidence. Similarly, whether cases in university counties were college- or university-related (i.e., through contact in classrooms, dormitories, cafeterias, or off-campus activities) or related to community transmission could not be discerned. Third, these results might not be generalizable to counties with smaller colleges and universities. Fourth, U.S. Census 2019 population estimates were used to calculate rates, which do not include all college and university enrollments. County-level rate calculations could be inflated for university counties, especially those for which the enrollment numbers are relatively large compared with the county's population size. Fifth, the longer-term implications for county incidence (i.e., beyond 21 days) were not assessed. Finally, the university counties in the unmatched analysis have larger populations and likely additional characteristics that are different from those of nonuniversity counties. This limitation prompted the decision to conduct the matched analysis, which focused on counties with more similar population levels and geographic proximity. However, broader generalizations based on the matched analysis might not be warranted because 11 university counties with in-person instruction were excluded from the matched analysis because no appropriate matches were available.

Summary

What is already known about this topic?

Increasing COVID-19 incidence was observed among young adults in August 2020, and outbreaks have been reported at institutions of higher education (colleges and universities).

What is added by this report?

U.S. counties with large colleges or universities with remote instruction (n = 22) experienced a 17.9% decrease in incidence and university counties with in-person instruction (n = 79) experienced a 56% increase in incidence, comparing the 21-day periods before and after classes started. Counties without large colleges or universities (n = 3,009) experienced a 6% decrease in incidence during similar time frames.

What are the implications for public health practice?

Additional implementation of effective mitigation activities at colleges and universities with in-person instruction could minimize on-campus COVID-19 transmission and reduce county-level incidence.

COVID-19 incidence, hotspot occurrence, COVID-19-related testing, and test positivity increased in university counties with in-person instruction. Efforts to prevent and mitigate COVID-19 transmission are critical for U.S. colleges and universities. Congregate living settings at colleges and universities were linked to transmissions (7). Testing students for COVID-19 when they return to campus and throughout the semester might be an effective strategy to rapidly identify and isolate new cases to interrupt and reduce further transmissions (8). Colleges and universities should work to achieve greater adherence to the recommended use of masks, hand hygiene, social distancing, and COVID-19 surveillance among students (9), including those who are exposed, symptomatic, and asymptomatic. The increase in testing rates likely reflects local efforts already underway to improve COVID-19 surveillance and response. Increasing testing capacity and engaging in other COVID-19 mitigation strategies might be especially important for colleges and universities in areas where transmission from students into the broader community could exacerbate existing disparities, including access to and utilization of health care, as well as the disproportionate morbidity and mortality of COVID-19 among populations with prevalent underlying conditions associated with more severe outcomes following infection. Some university counties might have one or more concerning factors, such as higher levels of older adult populations, high rates of obesity and cardiovascular disease, or strained health care resources. These counties might need to consider the implications of in-person instruction on spread of COVID-19 among a student population that might have interactions with persons at higher risk in the community. College and university administrators should work with local decision-makers and public health officials to strengthen community mitigation, in addition to continuing efforts to slow the spread of COVID-19 on college and university campuses.

Preventing transmission of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19), in colleges and universities requires mitigation strategies that address on- and off-campus congregate living settings as well as extracurricular activities and other social gatherings (1–4). At the start of the academic year, sorority and fraternity organizations host a series of recruitment activities known as rush week; rush week culminates with bid day, when selections are announced. At university A in Arkansas, sorority rush week (for women) was held during August 17–22, 2020, and consisted of on- and off-campus social gatherings, including an outdoor bid day event on August 22. Fraternity rush week (for men) occurred during August 27–31, with bid day scheduled for September 5. During August 22–September 5, university A–associated COVID-19 cases were reported to the Arkansas Department of Health (ADH). A total of 965 confirmed and probable COVID-19 cases associated with university A were identified, with symptom onset occurring during August 20–September 5, 2020; 31% of the patients with these cases reported involvement in any fraternity or sorority activity. Network analysis identified 54 gatherings among all linkages of cases to places of residence and cases to events, 49 (91%) were linked by participation in fraternity and sorority activities accounting for 42 (72%) links among gatherings. On September 4, university A banned gatherings of ≥10 persons, and fraternity bid day was held virtually. The rapid increase in COVID-19 cases was likely facilitated by on- and off-campus congregate living settings and activities, and health departments should work together with student organizations and university leadership to ensure compliance with mitigation measures.

University A began the academic year on August 24, offering in-class and virtual instruction for approximately 20,000 students; a majority of students used virtual instruction. Before and during the start of the academic year, students might have participated in on- and off-campus fraternity or sorority activities. Cases were identified by the university during an ADH-sponsored testing event (September 1–3) or linked to the university by ADH. Case data were reported to ADH by clinic staff members at university A and stored in an electronic database (REDCap, version 8.8.0; Vanderbilt University). Using a standardized questionnaire, ADH nurses interviewed persons with university-associated COVID-19 to ascertain demographic characteristics, date of symptom onset, university status, class attendance type (in-class or virtual), place of residence, and involvement in community- and school-related activities during the 14 days preceding illness onset. Illness onset was defined as the earliest date of reported symptoms for symptomatic cases* or as date of specimen collection for asymptomatic cases (ADH followed up with cases that had testing and diagnosis before symptom onset to identify date of symptom onset). Initial case reviews by ADH identified patients who reported recent participation in sorority or fraternity activities; subsequent infections were observed among cohabitants of these persons.

A network analysis was performed to assess the relationship between participation in university fraternity or sorority activities and the spread of COVID-19 among residential communities at university A. MicrobeTrace, a network analysis and visualization tool developed by CDC,† was used to visualize and describe the full network of persons with COVID-19 and identify potential transmission-related gatherings (network analysis terminology would refer to these as "communities"), defined as one or more gatherings in which multiple cases are identified and epidemiologically linked. COVID-19 patients were included in the network if they lived on campus, participated in fraternity or sorority activities, or lived in the same off-campus dwelling as a person who participated in these activities. Case-to-residence and case-to-event networks were constructed to map residential university A transmission-related gatherings. These networks were used to infer gatherings by algorithmically partitioning the network into the most densely linked cases (nodes) (5,6). In this network analysis method, the algorithm randomly assigns nodes a "community" identifier, and community connectivity is measured. For each person in the network, community identifiers are swapped with their neighbors and then remeasured. Only changes in community affiliation that improve connectivity are preserved, reversing any swaps that do not improve connectivity. This activity was reviewed by CDC and was conducted consistent with applicable federal law and CDC policy.§

* ADH followed up with cases that had testing and diagnosis before symptom onset to identify the actual date of symptom onset.

During August 22–September 5, a total of 965 university-associated COVID-19 cases with illness onset on or after August 20 were identified, including 699 (72%) confirmed cases (with positive reverse transcription–polymerase chain reaction test results) and 266 (28%) probable cases (with positive results for SARS-CoV-2 antigen test, performed at the university clinic). A 3-day, ADH-sponsored testing event, held during September 1–3 in response to an increase in university-associated cases detected by ADH, resulted in a 22% test positivity rate and identified 324 cases; overall, 34% of cases were identified through this testing event. Among the 965 confirmed and probable cases with illness onset dates during August 20–September 5, 673 (70%) occurred in women and 936 (97%) were in persons aged 18–24 years (Table). Five cases (<1%) in persons identified as faculty or staff members were reported. The number of cases with reported illness onset on a given day increased and peaked on August 31 (Figure 1). Forty-eight (5%) persons with COVID-19 had received in-class instruction, 292 (31%) participated in fraternity or sorority activities, and 149 (15%) lived in a fraternity or sorority house.

The network analysis linked 565 (59%) cases to 56 residences (16 dormitories, 20 apartments and houses, and 20 fraternity or sorority houses) and to their case-to-event associations (Figure 2). The full network consisted of one large, linked cluster of 471 (83%) cases (86% in women and 14% in men) and eight smaller, unlinked gatherings of 94 total cases (49% in women and 51% in men; cluster size range = 4–12 cases). Fifty-four gatherings were detected, including 27 (50%) with at least five cases. Among persons in 44 (81%) gatherings, at least one member regularly attended in-person classes, and at least one member of each of the 49 gatherings (91%) reported participation in fraternity or sorority activities or events. Gatherings included an average of 20.3 cases (median = 21; range = 5–44). Among 58 links between gatherings, 42 (72%) were associated with fraternity or sorority activities, 11 (19%) with on-campus dormitories, and five (9%) with off-campus apartments and houses.

Discussion

Within 2 weeks of the start of the 2020–21 academic year, COVID-19 cases rapidly increased among persons associated with university A. Transmission was likely facilitated by on- and off-campus congregate living settings and activities, with a majority of the gatherings (91%) and links between them (72%) associated with fraternities or sororities. Most patients reported virtual instruction only, which indicates transmission likely occurred primarily outside the classroom; this finding is supported by the very small proportion of cases among faculty and staff members (0.5%). Women constitute 54% of university A's 2020 student body but accounted for 70% of university A's COVID-19 cases. Among linked gatherings, women accounted for 86% of cases, a finding that could reflect involvement in gender-specific activities, including sorority rush week, which held an in-person outdoor bid day event and occurred before fraternity rush week, which was both held later and virtually.

Understanding networks can provide insights into COVID-19 transmission dynamics and inform effective mitigation strategies. In the absence of detailed person-to-person transmission data from contact tracing, network analysis using

What is already known about this topic?

Preventing COVID-19 in colleges and universities requires mitigation strategies addressing on- and off-campus congregate living settings, extracurricular activities, and social gatherings.

What is added by this report?

At the start of the 2020–21 academic year, COVID-19 cases increased rapidly at an Arkansas university. Network analysis indicated that 91% of gatherings were associated with fraternity or sorority activities. Recruitment events held virtually were associated with fewer cases than those held in-person.

What are the implications for public health practice?

Given the potential for rapid SARS-CoV-2 transmission in on- and off-campus settings and activities, colleges and universities should work with local health departments and student organizations to ensure compliance with mitigation guidelines.

available data on place of residence and involvement in on- and off-campus activities was used to describe university A's transmission network, potential gatherings where transmission might have taken place, and links between nodes. The network visualization tool depicted algorithm-detected gatherings to identify links indicating likely recent contact. Visualized in real-time, information from such links and networks could support implementation of targeted mitigation activities, such as isolation of cases and quarantining of contacts.

The findings in this report are subject to at least four limitations. First, incomplete case investigations resulted in missing or unknown data and exclusion from the network analysis. Second, housing and event attendance might not approximate transmission histories. Third, many cases were identified during mass testing events, and event advertisement and location could have resulted in a biased sample. Finally, data were not collected from uninfected persons or on adherence to mitigation strategies, such as social distancing, mask use, and hand hygiene.

Because of the potential for rapid transmission of SARS-CoV-2 in on- and off-campus university settings, student organizations could help ensure compliance with CDC-recommended COVID-19 mitigation measures, such as limiting the size of social gatherings, adhering to social distancing recommendations, requiring mask use, improving hand hygiene, and increasing testing. Encouraging more virtual activities, including those related to fraternity and sorority rush week, might help minimize the risk for transmission on university and college campuses. To ensure compliance with mitigation measures, health departments should work together with student organizations and university leaders.

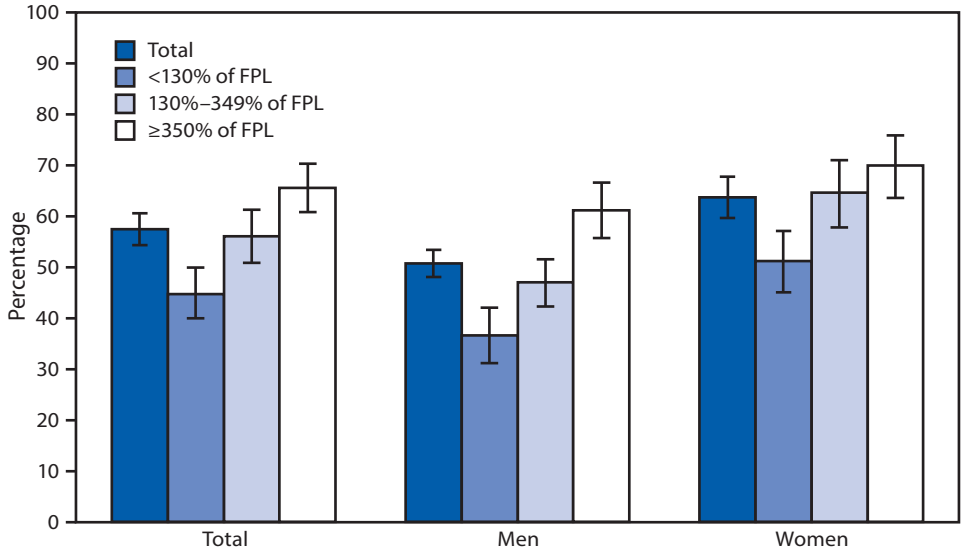
FROM THE NATIONAL CENTER FOR HEALTH STATISTICS

Percentage* of Adults Aged ≥20 Years Who Had Taken Any Dietary Supplement† in the Past 30 Days, by Sex and Family Income§ — National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey, United States, 2017–2018



Abbreviation: FPL = federal poverty level.
* Error bars indicate 95% confidence intervals.
† Dietary supplements are products taken by mouth that contain one or more dietary ingredients (vitamins, minerals, herbs or other botanicals, amino acids, and other substances) or their constituents and are labeled as such on the front panel.
§ Family income is defined as a percentage of the FPL. Participants missing information regarding family income were included in the total estimates but excluded in the estimates by family income.

During 2017–2018, 57.6% of adults aged ≥20 years had taken a dietary supplement within the past 30 days. The percentage increased with family income: 44.9% among those with family incomes <130% of the FPL, 56.2% among those with family incomes 130%–349% of the FPL, and 65.7% among those with family incomes ≥350% of the FPL. The increase with family income was seen for both men and women. Women were more likely than were men to use a dietary supplement overall (63.8% versus 50.8%) and at each income level.

From the Defense Health Agency (DHA).

Change 190 (01/07/2021) to the TRICARE Reimbursement Manual 6010.58-M, February 2008 is now available online at the TRICARE Manuals web site: Caution-https://manuals.health.mil/pages/DisplayManual.aspx?SeriesId=REIMBRSMT&TR08=190#TR08.

Summary of Changes: This change adds a new section to adopt CMS New Technology Add On Payment in addition to the DRG.

To view the above listed manual or any of the other TRICARE Manuals:

1. Browse to: Caution-https://manuals.health.mil/.

2. At the "TRICARE Manuals Online" page, select the Manual you wish to view.

3. Select the "Table of Contents at..." link. The Master Table of Contents will display. Any chapter listed (when selected) will link to the individual chapter's Table of Contents. Selecting the plus sign will expand the chapter to reveal all of it's sections.

If you have any questions, please contact the TRICARE Manuals help desk via e-mail at dha.buckley.health-opns.mbx.tricare-manuals-web-site-support@mail.mil.

Acting Attorney General Jeffrey A. Rosen issued the following statement:"The violence at our Nation’s Capitol Building is an intolerable attack on a fundamental institution of our democracy. From the outset, the Department of Justice has been working in close coordination with the Capitol Police and federal partners from the Interior Department, the Department of Homeland Security, and the National Guard, as well as the Metropolitan Police and other local authorities. Earlier this afternoon, the Department of Justice sent hundreds of federal law enforcement officers and agents from the FBI, ATF, and the U.S. Marshals Service to assist the Capitol Police in addressing this unacceptable situation, and we intend to enforce the laws of our land."

21P8009: Promoting Wellness and Resiliency in Correctional Staff

Date and Time : February 2nd / 11am PT / 12pm MT /1pm CT / 2pm ET for one hour

Webinar Summary : Do you want to see what some of the latest data and promising practices are revealing about staff wellness for corrections officers and staff? Would you like to learn how to apply a holistic approach to your workplace along the continuum of preventive to reactive responses? Correctional staff face significant stress and challenges in maintaining wellness and resiliency in the workplace. There is emerging evidence that effective strategies and programs exist; however, they often occur in a piecemeal or sporadic fashion. This webinar provides academic insight into the current research on officer wellness and references emerging areas of innovative practices. It includes practitioner expertise on valuable resources and support for correctional officers and staff. We will move from preventive to reactive strategies and build on new approaches to increase resiliency. Participants will learn what research and practice tell us about the short and long-term effects that working in corrections can have and how to promote staff wellness and manage trauma in response to what they experience.

Learning Objectives : During this one-hour interactive webinar, participants will 1) develop an understanding of the current research on correctional staff wellness and resiliency, 2) learn how to apply a holistic approach to their workplace, and 3) gain knowledge on promising real-world practices that can assist and promote both wellness and resiliency.

Speakers

Dr. Hayden Smith is an Associate Professor of Criminology & Criminal Justice at the University of South Carolina. His principal focus of study is the intersection of the criminal justice and public health systems. Core areas include self-injurious and suicidal behaviors in incarcerated populations, physical and mental health needs in correctional settings, jail diversion, reentry initiatives, and correctional staff well-being and safety. Dr. Smith has expertise in program evaluation and policy analysis and has worked with numerous correctional and health systems.

Ms. Karin Ho is the Director for Victim Services with the South Carolina Department of Corrections. She has more than 30 years of victim advocacy experience and over 25 years in corrections. Recognizing how correctional staff were affected by traumatic events, she implemented the Critical Incident Stress Management (CISM) Peer Team and Post Critical Incident Seminars for employees with ongoing trauma-related issues. As part of the CISM Team, Karin is the handler for a specially trained trauma dog who responds to correctional staff throughout the state.

The presenters have engaged in several academic-practitioner partnerships that address correctional officer and staff well-being.

Who Should Attend ?

Any employee of a state, federal or local correctional jurisdiction.

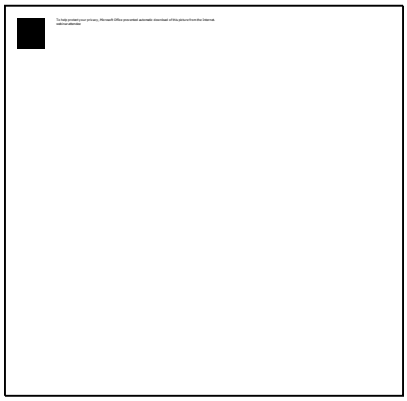
How Do I Participate Effectively In a WebEx Event Center Webinar?
How Do I Get Ready ?



For the best experience in your next NIC WebEx Event Center webinar, you'll need a hands-free telephone, headset or earbuds, and an internet-enabled computer. For optimum learning, be in a quiet place, free from distractions/interruptions, sight-and-sound separated from others, where you can concentrate on what is happening during the webinar. A separate office space with a door to close is an ideal setting. Connect to the webinar audio bridge via a hands-free telephone, using earbuds/headset connected to your phone/cell phone, so your hands are free to interact with your keyboard.

While tablets and smartphones are also compatible with WebEx Events Center, several of the features are limited, and most devices require the installation of the Cisco WebEx app. Regardless of which device you plan to use, test its compatibility here < Caution-

"Yesterday, our Nation watched in disbelief as a mob breached the Capitol Building and required federal and local law enforcement to help restore order. The Department of Justice is committed to ensuring that those responsible for this attack on our Government and the rule of law face the full consequences of their actions under the law. Our criminal prosecutors have been working throughout the night with special agents and investigators from the U.S. Capitol Police, FBI, ATF, Metropolitan Police Department and the public to gather the evidence, identify perpetrators, and charge federal crimes where warranted. Some participants in yesterday's violence will be charged today, and we will continue to methodically assess evidence, charge crimes and make arrests in the coming days and weeks to ensure that those responsible are held accountable under the law."

A federal grand jury returned a two-count indictment charging Surgical Care Affiliates LLC and its related entity (collectively SCA), which own and operate outpatient medical care centers across the country, for agreeing with competitors not to solicit senior-level employees, the Department of Justice announced today. These are the Antitrust Division's first charges in this ongoing investigation into employee allocation agreements.

"Yesterday, our Nation watched in disbelief as a mob breached the Capitol Building and required federal and local law enforcement to help restore order. The Department of Justice is committed to ensuring that those responsible for this attack on our Government and the rule of law face the full consequences of their actions under the law. Our criminal prosecutors have been working throughout the night with special agents and investigators from the U.S. Capitol Police, FBI, ATF, Metropolitan Police Department and the public to gather the evidence, identify perpetrators, and charge federal crimes where warranted. Some participants in yesterday's violence will be charged today, and we will continue to methodically assess evidence, charge crimes and make arrests in the coming days and weeks to ensure that those responsible are held accountable under the law."

Acting Attorney General Jeffrey A. Rosen issued the following statement:"The violence at our Nation’s Capitol Building is an intolerable attack on a fundamental institution of our democracy. From the outset, the Department of Justice has been working in close coordination with the Capitol Police and federal partners from the Interior Department, the Department of Homeland Security, and the National Guard, as well as the Metropolitan Police and other local authorities. Earlier this afternoon, the Department of Justice sent hundreds of federal law enforcement officers and agents from the FBI, ATF, and the U.S. Marshals Service to assist the Capitol Police in addressing this unacceptable situation, and we intend to enforce the laws of our land."

CISA, NASCAR, Daytona International Speedway and Local Partners Conduct Joint Exercise to Keep DAYTONA 500 Fans Safe < Caution-https://www.hstoday.us/subject-matter-areas/infrastructure-security/cisa-nascar-daytona-international-speedway-and-local-partners-conduct-joint-exercise-to-keep-daytona-500-fans-safe/ > (01/06) HSToday

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), NASCAR, the Daytona International Speedway, state and local first responders, law enforcement officials, and local businesses held a tabletop exercise today to test response plans around hypothetical public safety incidents on the day of the DAYTONA 500. By bringing together representatives from multiple agencies involved in the 63rd annual DAYTONA 500, set for Sunday, February 14, participants discussed their roles, shared best practices, and improved coordination mechanisms to help keep the public safe. The exercise is part of an ongoing partnership between those involved and was not in response to any specific threat.

Omnibus appropriations law features measure to secure state, local government websites with help from CISA < Caution-https://insidecybersecurity.com/daily-news/omnibus-appropriations-law-features-measure-secure-state-local-government-websites-help > (01/06) Inside Cybersecurity

State and local governments will get additional resources and help from CISA to improve the security of their websites using the .gov domain, through provisions that were staunchly supported by the leading association for state CIOs and included in the omnibus fiscal 2021 funding measure passed by Congress and enacted in December. The DotGov Online Trust in Government Act moves the General Services Administration's DotGov program for domain registration and management to the Department of Homeland Security.

US intel agencies: cyberattack was 'likely Russian in origin' < Caution-https://www.msnbc.com/rachel-maddow-show/us-intel-agencies-cyberattack-was-likely-russian-origin-n1252996 > (01/06)MSNBC

A few weeks ago, it became clear that the latest cyberattack against the United States was far more severe, both in its scope and its severity, than the usual intrusion. As NBC News reported, "Hackers who targeted the federal government appear to be part of a Russian intelligence campaign aimed at multiple U.S. agencies and companies." Soon after, one of the senators who received a classified briefing on the matter said he was "downright scared" of what he'd learned.

Justice Department also hacked by Russians in the ongoing cyberespionage < Caution-https://www.washingtonpost.com/national-security/justice-department-hit-russian-hackers/2021/01/06/d01cc6aa-5050-11eb-b96e-0e54447b23a1_story.html > (01/06) Washington Post

The Justice Department has become the latest known victim of Russian hackers, who are engaged in an ongoing campaign of cyberespionage that has afflicted federal agencies and the private sector. A department spokesman said Wednesday that the department's Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO), which handles network security, learned Dec. 24 of malicious activity linked to the hacking campaign. The intrusions into other federal agencies and technology firms were discovered earlier last month, and in the Justice Department's case it involved its unclassified Office 365 email system, spokesman Marc Raimondi said.

FBI, CISA, NSA Officially Blame Russia for SolarWinds Cyber Attack < Caution-https://thehackernews.com/2021/01/fbi-cisa-nsa-officially-blames-russia.html > (01/06) Hacker News

The U.S. government on Tuesday formally pointed fingers at the Russian government for orchestrating the massive SolarWinds supply chain attack that came to light early last month. "This work indicates that an Advanced Persistent Threat (APT) actor, likely Russian in origin, is responsible for most or all of the recently discovered, ongoing cyber compromises of both government and non-governmental networks," the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), and the National Security Agency (NSA) said in a joint statement.

American Intelligence Agencies Release Joint Statement About "Solar Winds" Hack < Caution-https://www.technadu.com/american-intelligence-agencies-joint-statement-solar-winds-hack/237830/ > (01/06) TechNadu

The CISA (Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency), the FBI (Federal Bureau of Investigation), the NSA (National Security Agency), and the ODNI (Office of the Director of National Intelligence) have released a joint statement to inform the American people about their progress in the investigation of the recent "Solar Winds" supply chain attacks that have shaken the field fundamentally. Moreover, they announce their unification for this purpose under a single task force known as UCG (Cyber Unified Coordination Group), aiming to speed up the process and create a convergence mechanism for the various investigating agencies.

EU authorizes Moderna's Covid-19 vaccine, paving the way for its rollout next week < Caution-https://www.cnn.com/2021/01/06/europe/moderna-approval-eu-intl/index.html > (01/06) CNN

The European Union has authorized Moderna's Covid-19 vaccine, the second coronavirus vaccine to be approved for use in the EU. The move finalizes the recommendation of the European Union drugs regulator, who earlier on Wednesday recommended granting the drug a conditional marketing authorization. Emer Cooke, the European Medicines Agency (EMA) executive director, said on Wednesday that "this vaccine provides us with another tool to overcome the current emergency."

The Covid-19 Pandemic And The Case For Healthcare As A Fundamental Freedom < Caution-https://www.forbes.com/sites/coronavirusfrontlines/2021/01/06/the-covid-19-pandemic-and-the-case-for-healthcare-as-a-fundamental-freedom/?sh=7b286ad94b6b > (01/06) Forbes

Our nation is on a precipice, but we have been challenged before. Eighty years ago, the United States was on the cusp of a World War and politically divided following a highly contentious election. On January 6th, 1941, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt delivered his State of the Union address rallying the country to fight the unprecedented threats of the day. He reminded the nation of the way of life and values that we were fighting to protect: freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want, and freedom from fear. We now remember this speech as the Four Freedoms.

Ribbon Communications Inc., a global provider of real time communications software and network solutions to service providers, enterprises, and critical infrastructure sectors, announced that Claro Brasil has selected Ribbon's SBC Software Edition to expand and secure their extensive Voice over IP network. "We have a long term relationship with Ribbon, which has always provided us with excellent performance, Quality of Service (QoS) and experience," said Roberto Beghini, Engineering Manager from Claro Brasil.

11 arrested as mob of Trump supporters protest at California Capitol < Caution-https://www.abc10.com/article/news/local/sacramento/11-arrested-as-mob-of-trump-supporters-protest-at-california-capitol/103-9707b72a-ed4e-4cb5-b8f7-07eda430ae46 > (01/06) ABC News
SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Eleven people were arrested near the California State Capitol Building where supporters of President Donald Trump clashed with anti-protesters Wednesday, the Sacramento Police Department reports. All the arrests were for illegal possession of pepper spray, according to the Sacramento Police Department. The department did not specify which groups the arrested individuals were with. One demonstrator reported being assaulted by another but was not injured, the Sacramento Police Department wrote on Twitter. None of the 200 police officers who patrolled the incident were injured.

SolarWinds Government Data Breach Leads to Securities Action < Caution-https://www.natlawreview.com/article/solarwinds-government-data-breach-leads-to-securities-action > (01/06) National Law Review
The massive data breach of the United States Commerce and Treasury Departments that has roiled the federal government has resulted in federal securities litigation. On January 4, 2021, Plaintiff-Shareholder Timothy Bremer filed a class action complaint against SolarWinds and SolarWinds' corporate executives in the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. SolarWinds provides information technology and infrastructure management software products to entities around the globe, including to various U.S. government vendors in the executive branch, military, and intelligence services.

SolarWinds Compromise: Cyber Unified Coordination Group Forms and Points Finger at Russia < Caution-https://news.clearancejobs.com/2021/01/06/solarwinds-compromise-cyber-unified-coordination-group-forms-and-points-finger-at-russia/ > (01/06) Clearance Jobs
The United States government, via the Office of the President, announced the creation of the Cyber Unified Coordination Group (UCG) composed of the FBI, CISA and the ODNI, with support from the NSA. The stated purpose of the UCG is to "coordinate the investigation and remediation" of the SolarWinds compromise. The compromise is characterized as an espionage operation carried out by Russia. The UCG acknowledged that there is still much to learn and that the members continue to strive to understand the scope of the hostile activity which targeted both public and private entities.

Austin's SolarWinds hit with lawsuit in wake of cyberattack < Caution-https://www.statesman.com/story/business/2021/01/06/lawsuit-filed-against-austin-based-solarwinds-following-cyberattack/6554660002/ > (01/06) Austin American-Statesman
Austin-based software maker SolarWinds is being sued by an investor in the wake of a massive data breach that appears to have affected nearly every level of government, as well as potentially hundreds of private companies. SolarWinds investor Timothy Bremer is the lead plaintiff in the lawsuit, which accuses the company of violating federal securities law and alleges SolarWinds made "materially false and misleading statements" related to security measures.

Widely Used Software Company May Be Entry Point for Huge U.S. Hacking < Caution-https://www.nytimes.com/2021/01/06/us/politics/russia-cyber-hack.html > (01/06) New York Times

American intelligence agencies and private cybersecurity investigators are examining the role of a widely used software company, JetBrains, in the far-reaching Russian hacking of federal agencies, private corporations and United States infrastructure, according to officials and executives briefed on the inquiry. Officials are investigating whether the company, founded by three Russian engineers in the Czech Republic with research labs in Russia, was breached and used as a pathway for hackers to insert back doors into the software of an untold number of technology companies. Security experts warn that the monthslong intrusion could be the biggest breach of United States networks in history.

We Should Have Known SolarWinds Would Be a Target (blog) < Caution-https://www.cfr.org/blog/we-should-have-known-solarwinds-would-be-target > (01/06) Council on Foreign Relations
The recent revelation of the SolarWinds hack provides an illustrative and timely example of how cybersecurity vulnerabilities can affect every organization, with the company's enterprise software, a network monitoring system, installed at government agencies, including the Departments of Commerce, Defense, and Treasury, tech giants such as Cisco, Intel, Nvidia, and VMware, and hospitals and universities. Our research shows the SolarWinds breach should come as no surprise. The risk of these supply chain hacks is much higher than previously acknowledged, due to the high level of connectivity across different sectors in the economy.

Life After the SolarWinds Supply Chain Attack < Caution-https://www.govtech.com/security/Life-After-the-SolarWinds-Supply-Chain-Attack.html > (01/06) Government Technology
By now, everyone on the planet has probably heard about the massive supply chain breach that occurred when network management software from SolarWinds had malware inserted into a trusted software update. This attack has exposed over 18,000 of their customers who used the affected software, many of them government agencies to potential breaches.

CYBERSECURITY

NSA releases cybersecurity guide on detecting and fixing outdated encryption protocol implementations < Caution-https://www.securitymagazine.com/articles/94287-nsa-releases-cybersecurity-guide-on-detecting-and-fixing-outdated-encryption-protocol-implementations > (01/06) Security Magazine
The National Security Agency released a cybersecurity product detailing how to detect and fix out-of-date encryption protocol implementations. Networks and systems that use deprecated forms of Transport Layer Security (TLS) or Secure Sockets Layer (SSL) for traffic sessions are at risk of sensitive data exposure and decryption. The Cybersecurity Information Sheet, "Eliminating Obsolete Transport Layer Security (TLS) Protocol Configurations" instructs National Security System (NSS), Department of Defense (DoD), and Defense Industrial Base (DIB) system administrators on how to detect, prioritize, and replace unauthorized or deprecated TLS protocols with ones that meet current standards.

The massive pro-Trump demonstrations that saw large crowds riot and then occupy the U.S. Capitol building in Washington on Wednesday pose a significant cybersecurity risk, experts say. The insurrection left four people dead, and led to Washington imposing a curfew and calling in the National Guard. Violent protesters gained access to the Senate chamber as well as at least one lawmaker's office, along with multiple computer systems and other devices.

More Chinese apps attract a ban from a presidential administration on the way out < Caution-https://www.cyberscoop.com/executive-order-trump-alipay-wechat-pay/ > (01/06) CyberScoop
President Donald Trump's latest executive order against Chinese tech companies might not ever take effect, but at a minimum it will force some decisions by the incoming presidential administration. The order bans U.S. transactions with several mobile apps, including Alipay and WeChat Pay, in the interest of protecting the security of U.S. users. The Trump administration made similar moves against TikTok last year, and those efforts are still tied up in court.

Phising Emails Spoof Australia's Cyber Security Center < Caution-https://www.bankinfosecurity.com/phishing-emails-spoof-australias-cyber-security-center-a-15706 > (01/06) BankInfoSecurity
The Australian Cyber Security Center is warning that fraudsters have recently started sending phishing emails that spoof the agency and contain malware designed to steal banking credentials. In an alert, the agency notes hackers posing as ACSC employees are sending emails requesting that recipients download antivirus software. When the victim clicks on a link, malicious code that can steal banking credentials is downloaded onto the compromised device. The fraudsters also are using spoofed phone numbers to directly call the victims to ask them to download certain applications. "The scammer then attempts to persuade recipients to take actions, such as enter a URL into a browser and access online banking services, which then compromises their computer to reveal banking information," the agency notes.

Unify SecOps, frameworks, and simulations into an assurance system that protects your crown jewels < Caution-https://www.scmagazine.com/perspectives/unify-secops-frameworks-and-simulations-into-an-assurance-system-that-protects-your-crown-jewels/ > (01/06) SC Magazine
Most organizations lack sufficient evidence or communication to assure the robustness of their security capabilities in terms that connect with and influence executive leadership. Creating rigorous security assurance requires that companies must follow the principle of cause and effect. On the causal side we have the organization's security capabilities. These exist to help mitigate the organization's impact from security threats. Unfortunately, current approaches of metrics and key performance indicators are too myopic and obscure the big picture, maturity to frameworks fail on business context and weakly calibrated threat methods.

Biden taps intelligence veteran for new White House cybersecurity role < Caution-https://www.politico.com/news/2021/01/06/biden-white-house-cybersecurity-neuberger-455508 > (01/06) Politico
President-elect Joe Biden plans to pluck a career intelligence official from the National Security Agency to serve in a newly created cybersecurity role on his National Security Council. Anne Neuberger, who joined the NSA more than a decade ago and has been serving as the agency's director of cybersecurity since 2019, will be named deputy national security adviser for cybersecurity in the incoming NSC, according to two people familiar with the plans.

Fed Issue Recommendations for Maritime Cybersecurity < Caution-https://threatpost.com/feds-recommendations-maritime-cybersecurity/162804/ > (01/06) Threatpost
The White House has released cybersecurity guidance for securing the Maritime Transportation System (MTS), which operates along 25,000 miles of coastal and inland waterways in the United States. The document points out that the MTS encompasses "361 ports, 124 shipyards, more than 3,500 maritime facilities, 20,000 bridges, 50,000 Federal aids to navigation, and 95,000 miles of shoreline that interconnect with critical highways, railways, airports and pipelines." In addition, there are more than 20 Federal government organizations that currently have a role in maritime security of all stripes, ranging from vessel and personnel safety to transportation standards and logistics.

ELECTION SECURITY

Watch out for this misinformation when Congress meets to certify the election. < Caution-https://www.nytimes.com/2021/01/06/business/watch-out-for-this-misinformation-when-congress-meets-to-certify-the-election.html > (01/06) The New York Times
As Congress meets on Wednesday to certify Joseph R. Biden Jr.'s victory in the November election, President Trump and his supporters continue to spread rumors, conspiracy theories and misinformation about the vote. Here are six false voter fraud claims that may be repeated during the proceedings on Wednesday.

Trump era bows out with scorched-earth drama in divided GOP < Caution-https://thehill.com/homenews/house/532806-trump-era-bows-out-with-scorched-earth-drama-in-divided-gop > (01/06) The Hill

The heated partisan politics of Capitol Hill will jump to scorching on Wednesday, when President Trump's staunchest Republican allies will launch a formal, public and futile effort to keep him in power by overturning the results of November's election. Trump's allegations of rampant voter fraud have been debunked by the states and rejected by the courts. But that hasn't stopped more than 100 GOP loyalists in the House and Senate from backing his bid to toss out the vote tallies of certain battleground states.

Fact check of objections Republican lawmakers may raise during Electoral College count < Caution-https://www.cbsnews.com/news/fact-check-objections-expected-republican-lawmakers-electoral-college-count/ > (01/06)CBS News

When the vice president of the United States presides over the counting of the Electoral College votes and announces the final tally and winner of the election, it's usually little more than a formality. But this year, President Trump's refusal to accept his loss to Joe Biden — and the willingness of many Republican lawmakers to indulge him — has teed up a tense day in the Capitol. It's Vice President Mike Pence who's tasked with this duty on Wednesday for the pro forma joint session of Congress. Tellers will read each state's tally aloud, and at any point, members may object to that state's votes.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

Reps. Spanberger, Katko introduce bill to better prepare for pandemics, other threats < Caution-https://homelandprepnews.com/stories/59908-reps-spanberger-katko-introduce-bill-to-better-prepare-for-pandemics-other-threats/ > (01/06) Homeland Preparedness News

U.S. Reps. Abigail Spanberger (D-VA) and John Katko (R-NY) introduced a bill to enhance the nation's readiness to prepare for and respond to public safety and national security threats – including pandemics. Their bill — the Analyzing Disaster Vulnerabilities and Applicable National Capabilities for Emergencies (ADVANCE) Act – would resume a discontinued program that analyzed the impacts of threats on critical infrastructure.

SUPPLY CHAIN

GSA introduces 'Polaris,' a new contract vehicle with potential to expand cyber certification program < Caution-https://insidecybersecurity.com/daily-news/gsa-introduces-%E2%80%98polaris%E2%80%99-new-contract-vehicle-potential-expand-cyber-certification > (01/06) Inside Cybersecurity

The General Services Administration has put out a draft request for proposals on "Polaris," a new contract vehicle for providing IT services to federal agencies, which includes language urging interested bidders to prepare for the Pentagon's cyber certification program requirements. The draft RFP is GSA's latest effort to prepare contractors who want to do work with the Defense Department as it rolls out the Cybersecurity Maturity Model Certification program. The Defense Department is integrating CMMC requirements over a five-year period into Pentagon contracts. The details on the first Pentagon contracts to feature CMMC language were released in December.

Together EU Rules Are Pushing Some Supply-Chain Debt Into Default < Caution-https://www.bloomberg.com/news/newsletters/2021-01-06/supply-chains-latest-banks-brace-for-new-eu-supply-chain-rules > (01/06) Bloomberg

The banks that grease Europe's supply chains face a spike in bad loans as the region's top regulator introduces tougher standards. The rules could classify 15% to 20% of receivables for which factoring firms bear the risk as defaulted, said Diego Tavecchia, an official at the EU Federation for the Factoring and Commercial Finance Industry. That equates to as much as 25.5 billion euros ($31.3 billion) in bad loans, he said.

5G SECURITY

DoD taps National Spectrum Consortium to help develop 5G < Caution-https://federalnewsnetwork.com/technology-main/2021/01/dod-taps-national-spectrum-consortium-to-help-develop-5g/ > (01/06) Federal News Network

The Defense Department has hired the National Spectrum Consortium to help it develop 5G communications applications. The five year deal, worth up to $2.5 billion, was awarded under an other transaction agreement. For what they plan to do, Federal Drive with Tom Temin spoke to Chair of the National Spectrum Consortium, Sal D'Itri.

5G talk will dominate virtual CES 2021 < Caution-https://www.cnet.com/news/5g-talk-will-dominate-virtual-ces-2021/ > (01/06) CNet

CES 2021 is filled with loads of uncertainties. How does the show replace the excitement of hands-on time with gadgets when everything is remote? Is there anything worth tuning in for? Will the heavy hitters of the tech industry show up? But one thing is for sure: 5G will be front and center at the trade show, which kicks off next week in a virtual format. Like last year, 5G will dominate the conversation. Verizon CEO Hans Vestberg is the first keynote speaker at CES, kicking things off Monday evening with a talk about the next-generation cellular technology.

RANSOMWARE

Most Public Sector Victims Refuse to Pay Ransomware Gangs < Caution-https://www.infosecurity-magazine.com/news/most-public-sector-victims-refuse/ > (01/06) Infosecurity-Magazine

The public sector is leading the way on ransomware resilience and refusing to pay its attackers, according to new research from Veritas. The data management firm polled 2690 IT execs at companies of over 1000 employees to compile its 2020 Ransomware Resiliency Report. It found that 86% of public sector respondents targeted with ransomware refused to pay, compared to an average of 43% across all verticals. This is linked to the fact that these organizations were more likely to be able to bounce back quickly from an incident, recovering over 90% of their data versus an average of 69% across all sectors, the study revealed.

Baltimore County schools confirms no data was accessed during ransomware attack < Caution-https://foxbaltimore.com/news/local/baltimore-county-schools-confirms-no-data-was-accessed-during-ransomware-attack > (01/06) Fox Baltimore

TOWSON, MD (WBFF) - Baltimore County Public Schools Superintendent Darryl Williams said the school system has confirmed there's no evidence any data was accessed or stolen during the recent ransomware attack. The school system was also able to access first-quarter grades from Schoology, and report cards will be issued on time, he noted.

EMERGENCY COMMUNICATIONS

FCC Seeking Input on Spending $3.2 Billion of Broadband Stimulus < Caution-https://www.meritalk.com/articles/fcc-seeking-input-on-spending-3-2-billion-of-broadband-stimulus/ > (01/06) Meritalk

The Federal Communications Commission is seeking public comment on how to best distribute $3.2 billion of funding approved by Congress late last month as part of combined FY 2021 government funding and COVID-19 relief legislation to help low-income Americans access internet services. The new funding will be administered through an Emergency Broadband Benefit Program authorized by the legislation and being created by the FCC, the agency said in a January 4 notice. The program will reimburse service providers for providing discounted broadband services and connected devices during the coronavirus pandemic.

1. Cocaine Found Floating Off The Florida Keys, CBP Stops Millions Of Meth, Fentanyl, Heroin At Border. December 28, 2020 (new net). A local fisherman found more than 74 pounds of cocaine in a dozen packages floating fifteen miles off the Florida Keys. The drugs have an estimated street value of about $850,000. Drugs floating off the Florida Keys are nothing new, according to the Miami Herald. In August and September, almost 150 pounds of marijuana were found floating off the island chain or washed up on the shore. In July, more than 50 pounds of cocaine washed up near Grassy Key. https://yournewsnet.com/cocaine-found-floating-off-the-florida-keys-cbp-stops-millions-of-meth-fentanyl-heroin-at-border/

2. Drug cartels peddling sedatives to Juarez addicts. January 5, 2020 (23 Valley Central). EL PASO, Texas (Border Report) – The use of potent synthetic substances is becoming so widespread in Juarez that drug dealers are now selling their clients sedatives to mitigate the after-effects, Mexican officials say. Juarez police have reported several recent seizures of clonazepam pills from individuals arrested for public intoxication and drug dealers who also carried doses of crystal meth. Three such seizures took place on Dec. 30 and involved two addicts, a dealer, and 67 pills, according to Juarez police reports. Clonazepam is a benzodiazepine, which is a family of medications that include Valium and Xanax used to treat anxiety, insomnia and seizure disorders. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has issued a warning against combining the medication with opioids – prescription drugs to reduce pain or illicit drugs such as heroin and fentanyl – and stimulants such as methamphetamine. Such a combination may result in respiratory depression, coma or death, the FDA says. The sale of synthetic drugs has proliferated in Juarez in the past two years as the Mexican cartels sell in-house whatever methamphetamine or fentanyl they can't manage to cross into the United States. This has brought on increased violence and rising addiction rates in border cities like Juarez, analysts say. Nava said drug users are also consuming clonazepam to deal with withdrawal symptoms, especially when they run out of money to purchase their next "fix" of hard drugs. An internet search revealed that Juarez pharmacies sell generic brands of clonazepam for less than $6 for a 2 mg box of 30, but a doctor's prescription is needed for sale. https://www.valleycentral.com/border-report/drug-cartels-peddling-sedatives-to-juarez-addicts/

3. Mexico fentanyl seizures soar by almost 500% in 2020. December 31, 2020 (Assiniboia Times). Mexico City - The Mexican army said Thursday that fentanyl seizures increased by at least 486% in 2020. Military and police forces said on the final day of the year that they had seized an estimated 1.3 tons of the synthetic opioid, compared to 222 kilograms in 2019. Much of Mexico's fentanyl production is smuggled into the United States in the form of counterfeit pills. Meth seizures rose by 6% to 34,555 kilograms in 2020. Meth is produced for the U.S. market, but also has become widely consumed in Mexico in one-dose packages costing as little as $1.50. Sandoval said the number of drug labs found in Mexico almost doubled, from 91 in 2019 to 175 in 2020. He said the recently established military control of sea and land ports of entry will help stem the flow of precursor chemicals used to make synthetic drugs. "All the raw materials used to make these drugs arrive through sea and land ports," he said. Mexican drug cartels import most of their precursor or analogue chemicals from Asia. President Andrés Manuel López Obrador placed the Navy in charge of seaports and the army in charge of inspections at border crossings this year in a bid to cut corruption and contraband.

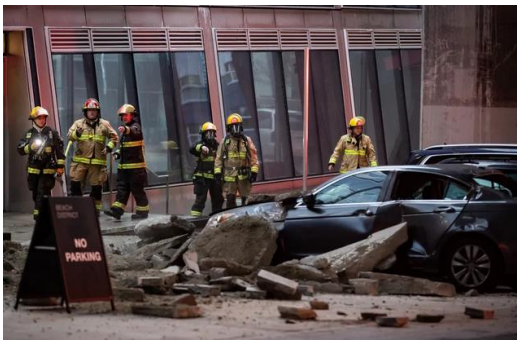
4. China bounces back. December 29, 2020 (Chemical Week). China's chemical industry has mirrored the overall economy with a v-shaped recovery. Chemical production in China edged up 0.3% in 2020, a sharp slowdown from growth of 4.9% in 2019, but growth in China's output of chemicals is expected to accelerate to 5.4% in 2021, according to the American Chemistry Council (ACC). China's chemical sector was the first to enter a severe downturn, beginning in December 2019, according to ACC. However, "China was the first nation to emerge from the downturn and by September had fully recovered and entered an expansion stage of the cycle," ACC says. The onset of the pandemic in China also highlighted the vulnerability of many international chemical supply chains, which could result in changes starting in 2021, particularly for critical raw materials used in industries such as agriculture, aviation, pharmaceuticals, and semiconductors. "As the pandemic unfolded, chemical supply chains that ran through China were initially disrupted," ACC says. "Concern [overseas] about supply-chain disruptions will lead to near- and on-shoring, accelerating any such decisions already in consideration prior to the pandemic, for example producers negatively impacted by the US-China trade war considering modifications to sourcing." China plans to reach peak greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions before 2030. The country is the biggest emitter of GHGs mainly due to its widespread use of coal, which accounts for about 64% of China's CO2 emissions. Carbon capture and storage, renewables, hydrogen, and electromobility will play a big role in the transformation, the IHS Markit report says. Following China's action plan, Sinopec announced that it had partnered with experts in climate change, energy, and chemicals to carry out research on the "strategic path of having [CO2] emissions peak and achieve carbon neutral before 2030." https://chemweek.com/CW/Document/116278/China-bounces-back

5. No one injured after fire and explosion near Granville Bridge in Vancouver. January 5, 2020 (CBC.ca) No one was injured after an explosion near the Granville Bridge in Vancouver sent concrete flying and damaged nearby vehicles. Vancouver Fire Rescue crews were called to a vehicle fire and explosion at about 3 p.m. at the bridge and Pacific Street, near the spinning chandelier. Although the blast blew up large chunks of concrete and did "a fair amount of damage" to adjacent vehicles, VFRS spokesperson Jonathan Gormick said no one was injured and the incident is not believed to be malicious in nature. It appears the explosion and fire are connected to an underground utility vault which might house electrical, natural gas or telecommunications equipment, Gormick said. Some of the concrete debris thrown into the air by the explosion was "three feet by four feet by eight inches thick," Gormick said.



"You can imagine how much that weighs and the amount of energy it takes to move one of those. It's fortunate no one was right near the explosion point." https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/british-columbia/vancouver-fire-report-explosion-1.5862634

6. India's pharma export shoots up amid coronavirus pandemic; 'China plus one' policy helps. January 5, 2020 (Financial Express). India's pharmaceutical industry significantly increased exporting drugs when the world was suffering from the coronavirus pandemic in the first half of the current fiscal year. The country's formulation surged 18 per cent while the bulk drug exports rose 9 per cent on-year during H1 FY21, said a report by Crisil. During the full previous fiscal, the exports of formulation rose 11 per cent and that of bulk drug contracted by 1 per cent. A spike in demand for pharma products, induced by the Covid-19 pandemic, and hoarding of supplies by some nations in the wake of production disruptions have boosted the exports, the report added. Another reason for the increased demand for active pharmaceutical ingredients (APIs) from India is the increasing customer diversification away from China and some countries adopting a 'China plus one' policy. The bigger markets such as the US and Europe have led to export growth due to increased demand for drugs. Furthermore, several Indian players have also inked agreements with Gilead Sciences to manufacture and export Remdesivir. https://www.financialexpress.com/industry/indias-pharma-export-shoots-up-amid-coronavirus-pandemic-china-plus-one-policy-helps/2164710/

Malaysia Airlines' Debt Restructuring Nears Completion

The parent company of Malaysia Airlines said on Thursday it was nearing the end of a debt restructuring process which it hopes will be completed by the end of the first quarter of this year. Malaysia Aviation Group (MAG) said it was in talks with around 40 creditors and lessors to take a haircut in its 16-billion-ringgit ($3.99 billion) debt restructuring plan, adding it was confident it could achieve a "win-win" result for all. MAG has been in discussions with creditors for months as part of efforts to turn around Malaysia's national carrier, long beset by high costs and a bloated workforce.

Norwegian Air Fighting for Survival with Most Planes Grounded Amid Pandemic

Low-cost airline Norwegian Air is battling for its future after a dramatic fall in passenger numbers because of the coronavirus travel restrictions. The airline, which previously operated flights from Birmingham Airport, was described as "fighting for survival" after passenger numbers fell by 94 per cent year-on-year in December. Norwegian Air operated nine planes on average in December, mainly on domestic routes in Scandinavia. The airline struggled to contain costs during its rapid expansion from a small, domestic operation to a global business and was forced to change its strategy two years ago to focus on profitability.

Boeing 767-300 Joins Growing Amazon Air Network

Amazon has purchased 11 new aircraft to join the ever-expanding Amazon Air network which includes their first ever Boeing 767-300. The news of the additions comes during a time where ecommerce is growing and customers are still relying on fast shipping from the marketplace. The additions will join the Amazon Air network by 2022 and help get parcels across long distances in shorter time frames to meet the needs of its growing customer base while investing in jobs and sustainable solutions to power its network. Amazon has made many sustainable decisions as of late, including the decision to buy six million gallons of sustainable aviation fuel in 2020.

To counter China's maritime influence in its backyard, India has been strengthening defense ties with countries in and around the Indian Ocean. India's foreign minister recently assured that India will be a reliable partner for the island nation. India is ramping up efforts to arm countries bound by the Indian Ocean and has offered to boost Sri Lanka's naval capabilities. Indian Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar said New Delhi is ready to assist Colombo in enhancing its capabilities to meet growing maritime and security challenges in the region.

High shipping rates are set to continue for at least several weeks, despite new coronavirus lockdowns in Europe, boosted by demand for furniture, exercise equipment and home improvement goods, shipping group Maersk said on Wednesday. A surge in demand from shoppers sheltering at home in a worsening COVID-19 pandemic has upended normal trade flows and triggered a spike in the cost of moving goods around. "There are simply not enough containers in the world to cope with the current demand," Maersk's Chief Commercial Officer Vincent Clerc told a media briefing. "We don't really see a big change in demand, even with new lockdowns in Europe. The current high container demand will continue at least for some weeks," he said.

Australian Maritime Union Calling on Govt. to Declare Seafarers as "Key Workers"

The Maritime Union of Australia (MUA) described as "notable" the omission of Australia among 45 IMO member states that have determined seafarers to be key workers. International Transport Workers Federation (ITF) president and MUA national secretary Paddy Crumlin said: "Australia must act immediately to align itself with international efforts, led by organisations like the IMO and ITF, to designate seafarers as key workers providing an essential service, and facilitate the safe and unhindered movement of seafarers for embarking and disembarking a vessel, accessing shore leave, and when necessary, access to shore-based medical treatment. Australia has taken a strong stance on enforcement of contract periods under the Maritime Labor Convention (MLC), however, at the same time has effectively barred crew change as part of its measures to protect the country from the spread of Covid-19.

CRRC Metro Train Debuts on Boston's Red Line

Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA) began operation with the first six-car metro train built by CRRC on the Boston metro Red Line on December 30. The first train was entirely built in China by CRRC Changchun Railway Vehicles. The remaining 246 metro cars from the order placed in October 2014, and expanded in December 2016, will be assembled by CRRC at its $US 95m factory in Springfield, Massachusetts, although delivery is running around a year behind schedule. CRRC says CRRC Changchun and CRRC Massachusetts developed detailed epidemic prevention and control plans to continue development and delivery of the metro trains to Boston during the Covid-19 pandemic.

South Korea's Hyundai Motor Group plans to establish its first overseas hydrogen fuel cell plant in Guangzhou, Guangdong province, this year in an effort to enter the growing hydrogen sector of the world's largest auto market. The carmaker has secured the South Korean government's approval to produce hydrogen fuel cells in China. Hyundai Motor is in talks with a Chinese company to form a joint venture for the construction of the plant. Hyundai is expected to announce the plant as early as this month. Last year, the carmaker said it plans to sell at least 27,000 fuel cell vehicles in China by 2030. It will scale up production capacity to 2,000 vehicles in 2021 to expand its presence in such markets as Europe and China.

China Gas Pipeline in Northern Guangdong Begins Operations

China Petroleum & Chemical Corp, or Sinopec, said a 238-kilometre (148 mile) natural gas pipeline in the northern part of China’s southern province Guangdong has started operation. The state energy giant was involved in the construction of the project, in an aim to help ease an energy supply crunch in the region. The pipeline will transfer coal gas from the far western region Xinjiang to Guangdong, according to the statement on Thursday. The national pipeline operator China Oil and Gas Pipeline Network, known as PipeChina, will manage and operate the new line in northern Guangdong.

China is preparing to launch three major missions in the next few months to initiate the construction phase of the country’s space station project. The China Academy of Launch Vehicle Technology (CALT) is finalizing work on rockets which will launch the first space station module, a cargo and refueling craft and a crewed mission. The launches will be the first of 11 planned missions to construct a three-module Chinese space station. The activity marks the beginning of the end phase of a project approved in 1992 to develop human spaceflight capabilities and establish a long-term crewed presence in low Earth orbit.

Attacks in Afghanistan left at least 23 civilians and security forces dead, officials said Thursday. In southern Uruzgan province, a suicide car bomber detonated a vehicle full of explosives early Thursday near a military base, killing six security forces, said a provincial council member who was not authorized to speak with the media. In southern Helmand province, at least five civilians were killed and five others wounded in a suspected airstrike late Wednesday on the outskirts of Lashkar Gah, the provincial capital, according to Attaullah Afghan, head of the provincial council. He said the casualties included children and women. No one immediately claimed responsibility for either attack.

In a significant development, an anti-terrorism court in Pakistan on Thursday issued an arrest warrant for banned Jaish-e-Mohammad (JeM) chief Masood Azhar on the charges of terror financing. The Anti-Terrorism Court (ATC) Gujranwala issued the warrant during a hearing in a terror financing case instituted by the Counter Terrorism Department (CTD) of Punjab police against some members of the JeM. Following the Pulwama terror attack in February 2019 in India, Pakistan's Punjab province police had launched a crackdown on terrorism financing and in this connection arrested six activists of the JeM in Gujranwala.

New Bank-Related Phishing Scam Involved Impersonation of Singapore Govt. Officials

Scammers have been impersonating Singapore government officials since December in what police on Tuesday (Jan 5) described as a new variant of bank-related phishing scams. Victims in such cases receive phone calls or messages allegedly from government agencies, such as the police or Ministry of Manpower, claiming that there are issues with their bank accounts. They are asked to verify their banking or personal details such as their Internet log-in credentials and NRIC numbers. Unauthorized transactions are then made from the accounts. Around 900 cases of bank-related phishing scams were reported in the first six months of 2020, a more than 25-fold increase from just 34 such cases for the same period in 2019, said the police.

French President Emmanuel Macron held a further telephone call yesterday with Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan to highlight France's plans to help Armenia with humanitarian aid, said Macron's office on Thursday. Macron also reiterated his determination to find a political solution for the region, which was hit last year by military clashes between Armenia and Azerbaijan over the Nagorno-Karabakh enclave, which ended with a Russian-brokered truce and big territorial gains for Azerbaijan.

Russian Experts Warn of Nuclear Arms Race

Nuclear trains were once considered a relic of the Cold War. But now the secretive locomotives could be set for a comeback, carrying warheads around Russia in a move that could set Moscow on a collision course with Washington. In comments carried by the Mosckovsky Komsomolets newspaper, Russian military expert Alexey Leonkov outlined how the Soviet era project could be reborn. He said the deployment of train-based intercontinental ballistic missiles might be Russia's next step amid escalating nuclear tensions with NATO. The deployment is sure to raise hackles in the United States. The New York Times reported on Sunday that Biden's incoming national security adviser Jake Sullivan said the new administration would move quickly to renew the last remaining major nuclear arms treaty with Russia.

Sudan Signs 'Abraham Accords' With US, Paving Way for Israel Normalization

Sudan on Wednesday signed the "Abraham Accords" with the United States, paving the way for the African country to normalize ties with Israel. A statement from the office of Sudan's prime minister said Justice Minister Nasredeen Abdulbari signed the accord Wednesday with visiting US Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin. The agreement signed Wednesday was a largely symbolic document, indicating Sudan's intentions to move forward with normalization. The memorandum did not officially establish diplomatic ties between Khartoum and Jerusalem, a move that is expected to happen in the near future, at an as yet undetermined date.

U.S. Role in the World: Background and Issues for Congress

The U.S. role in the world refers to the overall character, purpose, or direction of U.S. participation in international affairs and the country's overall relationship to the rest of the world. The U.S. role in the world can be viewed as establishing the overall context or framework for U.S. policymakers for developing, implementing, and measuring the success of U.S. policies and actions on specific international issues, and for foreign countries or other observers for interpreting and understanding U.S. actions on the world stage.

While descriptions of the traditional U.S. role in the world since the end of World War II vary in their specifics, it can be described in general terms as consisting of four key elements: global leadership; defense and promotion of the liberal international order; defense and promotion of freedom, democracy, and human rights; and prevention of the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia.

The issue for Congress is whether the U.S. role in the world has changed, and if so, what implications this might have for the United States and the world. A change in the U.S. role could have significant and even profound effects on U.S. security, freedom, and prosperity. It could significantly affect U.S. policy in areas such as relations with allies and other countries, defense plans and programs, trade and international finance, foreign assistance, and human rights.

Some observers, particularly critics of the Trump Administration, argue that under the Trump Administration, the United States has substantially changed the U.S. role in the world. Other observers, particularly supporters of the Trump Administration, while acknowledging that the Trump Administration has changed U.S. foreign policy in a number of areas compared to policies pursued by the Obama Administration, argue that under the Trump Administration, there has been less change and more continuity regarding the U.S. role in the world.

Some observers who assess that the United States under the Trump Administration has substantially changed the U.S. role in the world—particularly critics of the Trump Administration, and also some who were critical of the Obama Administration—view the implications of that change as undesirable. They view the change as an unnecessary retreat from U.S. global leadership and a gratuitous discarding of long-held U.S. values, and judge it to be an unforced error of immense proportions—a needless and self-defeating squandering of something of great value to the United States that the United States had worked to build and maintain for 70 years.

Other observers who assess that there has been a change in the U.S. role in the world in recent years—particularly supporters of the Trump Administration, but also some observers who were arguing even prior to the Trump Administration in favor of a more restrained U.S. role in the world—view the change in the U.S. role, or at least certain aspects of it, as helpful for responding to changed U.S. and global circumstances and for defending U.S. values and interests, particularly in terms of adjusting the U.S. role to one that is more realistic regarding what the United States can accomplish, enhancing deterrence of potential regional aggression by making potential U.S. actions less predictable to potential adversaries, reestablishing respect for national sovereignty as a guidepost for U.S. foreign policy and for organizing international affairs, and encouraging U.S. allies and security partners in Eurasia to do more to defend themselves.

Congress's decisions regarding the U.S. role in the world could have significant implications for numerous policies, plans, programs, and budgets, and for the role of Congress relative to that of the executive branch in U.S. foreign policymaking.

Introduction

This report provides background information and issues for Congress regarding the U.S. role in the world, meaning the overall character, purpose, or direction of U.S. participation in international affairs and the country's overall relationship to the rest of the world. The U.S. role in the world can be viewed as establishing the overall context or framework for U.S. policymakers for developing, implementing, and measuring the success of U.S. policies and actions on specific international issues, and for foreign countries or other observers for interpreting and understanding U.S. actions on the world stage.

Some observers perceive that after remaining generally stable for a period of more than 70 years (i.e., since the end of World War II in 1945), the U.S. role in the world under the Trump Administration has undergone a substantial change. A change in the U.S. role in the world could have significant and even profound effects on U.S. security, freedom, and prosperity. It could significantly affect U.S. policy in areas such as relations with allies and other countries, defense plans and programs, trade and international finance, foreign assistance, and human rights.

The issue for Congress is whether the U.S. role in the world has changed, and if so, what implications this might have for the United States and the world. Congress's decisions regarding the U.S. role in the world could have significant implications for numerous policies, plans, programs, and budgets, and for the role of Congress relative to that of the executive branch in U.S. foreign policymaking.

A variety of other CRS reports address in greater depth specific international issues mentioned in this report. Appendix A provides a glossary of some key terms used in this report, such as international order or regional hegemon. For convenience, this report uses the term U.S. role as a shorthand for referring to the U.S. role in the world.

Background

Overview of Traditional U.S. Role: Four Key Elements

While descriptions of the traditional U.S. role in the world since the end of World War II vary in their specifics, it can be described in general terms as consisting of four key elements:

- global leadership;
- defense and promotion of the liberal international order;
- defense and promotion of freedom, democracy, and human rights; and
- prevention of the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia.

Global Leadership

The traditional U.S. role in the world since the end of World War II is generally described, first and foremost, as one of global leadership, meaning that the United States tends to be the first or most important country for identifying or framing international issues, taking actions to address those issues, setting an example for other countries to follow, organizing and implementing multilateral efforts to address international issues, and enforcing international rules and norms.

Observers over the years have referred to U.S. global leadership using various terms, some of which reflect varying degrees of approval or disapproval of this aspect of the U.S. role. Examples of such terms (other than global leader itself) include leader of the free world, superpower, indispensable power, system administrator, hyperpower, world policeman, or world hegemon.

The U.S. role of global leadership has resulted in extensive U.S. involvement in international affairs, and this, too, has been described with various phrases. The United States has been described as pursuing an internationalist foreign policy; a foreign policy of global engagement or deep engagement; a foreign policy that provides global public goods; a foreign policy of liberal order building, liberal internationalism, or liberal hegemony; an interventionist foreign policy; or a foreign policy of seeking primacy or world hegemony.

Defense and Promotion of Liberal International Order

A second key element of the traditional U.S. role in the world since World War II—one that can be viewed as inherently related to the first key element above—has been to defend and promote the liberal international order[1] that the United States, with the support of its allies, created in the years after World War II. Although definitions of the liberal international order vary, key elements of it are generally said to include the following:

- respect for the territorial integrity of countries, and the unacceptability of changing international borders by force or coercion;
- a preference for resolving disputes between countries peacefully, without the use or threat of use of force or coercion, and in a manner consistent with international law;
- respect for international law, global rules and norms, and universal values, including human rights;
- strong international institutions for supporting and implementing international law, global rules and norms, and universal values;
- the use of liberal (i.e., rules-based) international trading and investment systems to advance open, rules-based economic engagement, development, growth, and prosperity; and
- the treatment of international waters, international air space, outer space, and (more recently) cyberspace as international commons rather than domains subject to national sovereignty.

Most of the key elements above (arguably, all but the final one) can be viewed collectively as forming what is commonly referred to as a rules-based international order. A traditional antithesis of a rules-based order is a might-makes-right order (sometimes colloquially referred to as the law of the jungle), which is an international order (or a situation lacking in order) in which more powerful countries routinely impose their will arbitrarily on less-powerful countries, organizations, and individuals, with little or no regard to rules.

[1] Other terms used to refer to the liberal international order include U.S.-led international order, postwar international order, rules-based international order, and open international order. Observers sometimes substitute world for international, or omit international or world and refer simply to the liberal order, the U.S.-led order, and so on. In the terms liberal international order and liberal order, the word liberal does not refer to the conservative-liberal construct often used in discussing contemporary politics in the United States or other countries. It is, instead, an older use of the term that refers to an order based on the rule of law, as opposed to an order based on the arbitrary powers of hereditary monarchs.

Though often referred to as if it is a fully developed or universally established situation, the liberal international order, like other international orders that preceded it, is

- incomplete in geographic reach and in other ways;
- partly aspirational;
- not fixed in stone, but rather subject to evolution over time;
- sometimes violated by its supporters;
- not entirely free of might-makes-right behavior;
- resisted or rejected by certain states and nonstate actors; and
- subject to various stresses and challenges.

Some observers, emphasizing points like those above, argue that the liberal international order is more of a myth than a reality. Other observers, particularly supporters of the order, while acknowledging the limitations of the order, reject characterizations of it as a myth and emphasize its differences from international orders that preceded it.

As mentioned above, the liberal international order was created by the United States with the support of its allies in the years immediately after World War II. At that time, the United States was the only country with both the capacity and willingness to establish a new international order. U.S. willingness to establish and play a leading role in maintaining the liberal international order is generally viewed as reflecting a desire by U.S. policymakers to avoid repeating the deadly major wars and widespread economic disruption and deprivation of the first half of the 20th century—a period that included World War I, the Great Depression, the rise of communism and fascism, the Ukrainian famine, the Holocaust, and World War II.

U.S. willingness to establish and play a leading role in maintaining the liberal international order is also generally viewed as an act of national self-interest, reflecting a belief among U.S. policymakers that it would strongly serve U.S. security, political, and economic objectives. Supporters of the liberal international order generally argue that in return for bearing the costs of creating and sustaining the liberal international order, the United States receives significant security, political, and economic benefits, including the maintenance of a favorable balance of power on both a global and regional level, and a leading or dominant role in establishing and operating global institutions and rules for international finance and trade. Indeed, some critics of the liberal international order argue that it is primarily a construct for serving U.S. interests and promoting U.S. world primacy or hegemony. The costs and benefits for the United States of defending and promoting the liberal international order, however, are a matter of debate.

Defense and Promotion of Freedom, Democracy, and Human Rights

A third key element of the traditional U.S. role in the world since World War II has been to defend and promote freedom, democracy, and human rights as universal values, while criticizing and resisting authoritarian and illiberal forms of government where possible. This element of the U.S. role is viewed as consistent not only with core U.S. political values but also with a theory advanced by some observers (sometimes called the democratic peace theory) that democratic countries are more responsive to the desires of their populations and consequently are less likely to wage wars of aggression or go to war with one another.

Defending and promoting freedom, democracy, and human rights is additionally viewed as a key component of U.S. soft power, because it can encourage like-minded governments, as well as organizations and individuals in other countries, to work with the United States, and because it has the potential to shape the behavior of authoritarian and illiberal governments that are acting against U.S. interests by shaming those governments and inspiring prodemocracy organizations and individuals within those countries.

Prevention of Emergence of Regional Hegemons in Eurasia

A fourth element of the traditional U.S. role in the world since World War II—one that U.S. policymakers do not often state explicitly in public—has been to oppose the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia. This objective reflects a U.S. perspective on geopolitics and grand strategy developed by U.S. strategists and policymakers during and in the years immediately after World War II that incorporates two key judgments:

- that given the amount of people, resources, and economic activity in Eurasia, a regional hegemon in Eurasia would represent a concentration of power large enough to be able to threaten vital U.S. interests; and
- that Eurasia is not dependably self-regulating in terms of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons, meaning that the countries of Eurasia cannot be counted on to be able to prevent, though their own actions, the emergence of regional hegemons, and may need assistance from one or more countries outside Eurasia to be able to do this dependably.[2]

Preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia is sometimes also referred to as preserving a division of power in Eurasia, or as preventing key regions in Eurasia from coming under the domination of a single power, or as preventing the emergence of a spheres-of-influence world, which could be a consequence of the emergence of one or more regional hegemons in Eurasia.

U.S. actions that can be viewed as expressions of the U.S. goal of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia include but are not necessarily limited to the following:

- U.S. participation in World War I,[3] World War II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War;[4]
- U.S. alliances and security partnerships, including
  - the NATO alliance, which was established in large part to deter and counter attempts by the Soviet Union (now Russia) to become a regional hegemon in Europe;

[2] For additional discussion, see CRS In Focus IF10485, Defense Primer: Geography, Strategy, and U.S. Force Design, by Ronald O'Rourke.

[3] Although the goal of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons was not articulated in explicit terms (at least not widely) by U.S. strategists until World War II and the years immediately thereafter, U.S. participation in World War I against Germany can in retrospect be viewed as an earlier U.S. action reflecting this goal.

[4] U.S. participation in the Vietnam War was justified in part by the so-called domino theory, which argued that a victory by communist-ruled North Vietnam over South Vietnam could be followed by other countries in the region falling, like dominos in a row, under communist control. Opponents of the domino theory challenged its validity and argue that it was disproven when North Vietnam's defeat of South Vietnam was not followed by other countries in the region falling under communist control. The theory's supporters argue that the theory was not disproven, because the years-long U.S. effort to defend South Vietnam, though ultimately unsuccessful in preventing victory by North Vietnam, gave other countries in the region time and space to develop their political institutions and economies enough to deter or resist communist movements in their own countries. Valid or not, the domino theory's use as a justification links U.S. participation in the war to the goal of preventing the emergence of a regional hegemon (in this case, a communist hegemon of China and/or the Soviet Union).

  - U.S. alliances with countries in East Asia and the Pacific, which were established in large part to deter and counter attempts by the Soviet Union or China to become a regional hegemon in East Asia; and
  - U.S. security partnerships with countries in the Persian Gulf region, which were established in large part to deter or counter attempts by Iran or the Soviet Union (now Russia) to become a regional hegemon in that region; and
- additional U.S. political, diplomatic, and economic actions to contain and oppose the Soviet Union during the Cold War, including the Marshall Plan and subsequent U.S. foreign assistance programs.

In pursuing the goal of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia, U.S. policymakers have sometimes decided to work with or support nondemocratic regimes that for their own reasons view Russia, China, or Iran as competitors or adversaries. As a consequence, the goal of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Asia has sometimes been in tension with defending and promoting freedom, democracy, and human rights.

Changes over Time

Although the traditional U.S. role in the world was generally stable over the past 70 years, the specifics of U.S. foreign policy for implementing that role have changed frequently for various reasons, including changes in administrations and changes in the international security environment. Definitions of the U.S. role have room within them to accommodate some variation in the specifics of U.S. foreign policy.

Long-Standing Debate over Its Merits

The fact that the U.S. role in the world has been generally stable over the past 70 years does not necessarily mean that this role was the right one for the United States, or that it would be the right one in the future. Although the role the United States has played in the world since the end of World War II has many defenders, it also has critics, and the merits of that role have been a matter of long-standing debate among foreign policy specialists, strategists, policymakers, and the public, with critics offering potential alternative concepts for the U.S. role in the world.

The most prominent dimension of the debate is whether the United States should attempt to continue playing the active internationalist role that it has played for the past 70 years, or instead adopt a more restrained role that reduces U.S. involvement in world affairs. A number of critics of the U.S. role in the world over the past 70 years have offered multiple variations on the idea of a more restrained U.S. role. (For additional discussion, see Appendix B.)

A second major dimension within the debate over the future U.S. role concerns how to balance or combine the pursuit of narrowly defined material U.S. interests with the goal of defending and promoting U.S. or universal values such as democracy, freedom, and human rights. A third major dimension concerns the balance in U.S. foreign policy between the use of hard power and soft power. Observers debating these two dimensions of the future U.S. role in the world stake out varying positions on these questions.

Issues for Congress

The issue for Congress is whether the U.S. role in the world has changed, and if so, what implications this might have for the United States and the world. The sections below provide some discussion of this issue.

Has the United States Changed Its Role?

There currently are multiple views on the question of whether the United States under the Trump Administration has changed the U.S. role in the world, some of which are outlined briefly below.

Some Observers Believe the United States Has Changed Its Role

Some observers, particularly critics of the Trump Administration, argue that under the Trump Administration, the United States has substantially changed the U.S. role in the world by altering some or all of the four key elements of the U.S. role described earlier. Although views among these observers vary in their specifics, a number of these observers argue that the Administration's America First construct, its emphasis on national sovereignty as a primary guidepost for U.S. foreign policy, and other Administration actions and statements form a new U.S. role characterized by

- a voluntary retreat from or abdication of global leadership,
- a greater reliance on unilateralism,
- a reduced willingness to work through international or multilateral institutions and agreements,
- an acceptance of U.S. isolation or near-isolation on certain international issues,
- a more skeptical view of the value of alliances to the United States,
- a less-critical view of certain authoritarian or illiberal governments,
- a reduced or more selective approach to promoting and defending certain universal values,
- the elevation of bilateral trade balances, commercial considerations, monetary transactions, and ownership of assets such as oil above other foreign policy considerations, and
- an implicit tolerance of the reemergence of aspects of a might-makes-right international order.

In support of this view, these observers cite various Administration actions and statements, including, among other things

- the Administration's decisions to withdraw from certain international agreements—including the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) regional trade agreement, the multilateral Paris climate agreement, and the Iran nuclear agreement—and from the World Health Organization (WHO);
- its earlier proposals for reducing State Department funding and foreign assistance funding, and delays in filling senior State Department positions;
- the President's skeptical statements regarding the value to the United States of certain U.S. alliances (particularly with European countries and South Korea) and more generally his apparent transactional and monetary-focused approach to understanding and managing alliance relationships;
- what these observers view as the President's affinity for certain authoritarian or illiberal leaders, as well as his apparent reluctance to criticize Russia and his apparent continued desire to seek improved relations with Russia, despite Russian actions judged by U.S. intelligence agencies and other observers to have been directed against the United States and overseas U.S. interests;

- the President's decision, announced by the Administration on October 6, 2019, to withdraw U.S. troops from northern Syria, and the Administration's initiatives to reduce the U.S. military presence in Germany, Afghanistan, and Iraq;
- the Administration's focus on pursuing bilateral trade negotiations with various countries (as opposed to regional or multilateral trade negotiations); and
- the Administration's infrequent or inconsistent statements in support of democracy and human rights, including the Administration's reaction to the killing of journalist Jamal Khashoggi and some of the President's statements regarding the prodemocracy protests in Hong Kong.

Other Observers Disagree

Other observers, particularly supporters of the Trump Administration, disagree with some or all of the perspective above. While acknowledging that the Trump Administration has changed U.S. foreign policy in a number of areas compared to policies pursued by the Obama Administration, these observers argue that under the Trump Administration, there has been less change and more continuity regarding the U.S. role in the world. In support of this view, these observers cite, among other things

- the Administration's December 2017 national security strategy (NSS) document and its January 2018 unclassified summary of its supporting national defense strategy (NDS) document—large portions of which refer to U.S. leadership, a general emphasis on great power competition with China and Russia, and strong support for U.S. alliances;
- Administration statements reaffirming U.S. support for NATO, as well as Administration actions to improve U.S. military capabilities in Europe for deterring potential Russian aggression in Europe;
- the Administration's willingness to impose and maintain a variety of sanctions on Russia;
- the Administration's Free and Open Indo-Pacific (FOIP) construct for guiding U.S. policy toward the Indo-Pacific region;
- the Administration's more confrontational policy toward China, including its plan to increase funding for U.S. foreign assistance programs to compete against China for influence in Africa, Asia, and the Americas;
- U.S. trade actions that, in the view of these observers, are intended to make free trade more sustainable over the long run by ensuring that it is fair to all parties, including the United States; and
- the Administration's (admittedly belated) support of Hong Kong's prodemocracy protestors, its criticism of China's human rights practices toward its Muslim Uyghur population, and its emphasis on religious freedom as a major component of human rights.

Still Other Observers See a Mixed or Confusing Situation

Still other observers, viewing points made by both of the above sets of observers, see a mixed or confusing situation regarding whether the United States under the Trump Administration has changed the U.S. role in the world. For these observers, whether the U.S. role has changed is difficult to discern, in part because of what they view as incoherence or contradictions in the Administration's foreign policies and in part because the President's apparent views on certain issues—such as the value of U.S. alliances, the acceptability of certain actions by Russia or North Korea, and the importance of democracy and human rights as universal values—have frequently been in tension with or contradicted by statements and actions of senior Administration officials (particularly those who served during the first two years or so of the Administration), with the President's views being more consistent with the change in the U.S. role outlined by the first set of observers above, and statements and actions of senior Administration officials frequently being more consistent with a continuation of the U.S. role of the past 70 years outlined by the second set of observers above.

Some Observers Argue That Change Began Earlier

Some observers argue that if the U.S. role has changed, that change started not under the Trump Administration, but under the Obama Administration, particularly regarding the question of whether the United States has reduced or withdrawn from global leadership. In support of this view, these observers cite what they views as the Obama Administration's

- focus on reducing the U.S. military presence and ending U.S. combat operations in Iraq and Afghanistan in favor of focusing more on domestic U.S. rebuilding initiatives,
- decision to announce but not enforce a "red line" regarding the behavior of the Syrian government, and
- restrained response to Russian actions in Crimea and eastern Ukraine, and more generally, its reluctance, for a time at least, to fully acknowledge and adapt to less cooperative and more confrontational relationships with Russia and China.

Still others view the start of a change in the U.S. role as occurring even sooner, under the George W. Bush Administration—when that Administration did not respond more strongly to Russia's 2008 invasion and occupation of part of Georgia—or under the Clinton Administration.

For these observers, a change in the U.S. role in the world under the Trump Administration may represent not so much a shift in the U.S. role as a continuation or deepening of a change that began in a prior U.S. administration.

Potential Combined Perspectives

The perspectives outlined in the preceding sections are not necessarily mutually exclusive—assessments combining aspects of more than one of these perspectives are possible.

Implications of a Changed U.S. Role

Among observers who assess that there has been a change in the U.S. role in the world in recent years, there are multiple views regarding the potential implications of that change.

Some Observers View Implications as Undesirable

Some observers who assess that the United States under the Trump Administration has substantially changed the U.S. role in the world—particularly critics of the Trump Administration, and also some who were critical of the Obama Administration—view the implications of that change as undesirable. They view the change as an unnecessary retreat from U.S. global leadership and a gratuitous discarding of long-held U.S. values, and judge it to be an unforced error of immense proportions—a needless and self-defeating squandering of something of great value to the United States that the United States had worked to build and maintain for 70 years. More specifically, they argue that the change in the U.S. role in recent years that they see is doing some or all of the following:

- reducing U.S. power and foreign-policy capacity, particularly by weakening or hollowing out the State Department and reducing or devaluing elements of U.S. soft power;
- weakening the U.S. ability to leverage its power and foreign-policy capacity in international affairs—and isolating the United States on certain international issues, effectively turning the concept of America First into "America Alone"—by
  - damaging long-standing and valuable U.S. alliance relationships,
  - reducing U.S. participation in multilateral political and trade negotiations and agreements, and
  - making the United States look more erratic and impulsive as an international actor, and less reliable as an ally and negotiating partner;
- weakening the U.S.-led international order and encouraging a reemergence of aspects of a might-makes-right international order;
- slowing the spread of democracy and human rights, encouraging a moral equivalency between the United States and authoritarian and illiberal countries, and tacitly facilitating a reemergence of authoritarian and illiberal forms of government;
- disregarding the costly lessons of the first half of the 20th century, and how the U.S. role in the world of the last 70 years has been motivated at bottom by a desire to prevent a repetition of the horrific events of that period; and
- creating vacuums in global leadership in establishing and maintaining global rules and norms, on the disposition of specific disputes and other issues, and in regional power balances that China and Russia as well as France, Turkey, Syria, Iran, and other countries are moving to fill, often at the expense of U.S. interests and values.

Other Observers View Implications as Helpful

Other observers who assess that there has been a change in the U.S. role in the world in recent years—particularly supporters of the Trump Administration, but also some observers who were arguing even prior to the Trump Administration in favor of a more-restrained U.S. role in the world—view the change in the U.S. role, or at least certain aspects of it, as helpful for responding to changed U.S. and global circumstances and for defending U.S. values and interests. More specifically, they argue that the change in the U.S. role in recent years that they see is doing some or all of the following:

- winding down U.S. participation in so-called endless wars (aka forever wars) in places such as Afghanistan and Iraq, and also not starting new wars;
- emphasizing religious freedom—a core U.S. value—as a central tenet in U.S. foreign policy;
- adjusting the U.S. role to one that is more realistic regarding what the United States can accomplish in the world today and in the future, particularly given limits on U.S. resources and the reduction in U.S. economic and military preponderance in recent decades as other countries have grown economically and developed their militaries;

- enhancing deterrence of potential regional aggression by making potential U.S. actions less predictable to potential adversaries;
- reestablishing respect for national sovereignty as a guidepost for U.S. foreign policy and for organizing international affairs;
- encouraging U.S. allies and security partners in Eurasia to do more to defend themselves, thereby reducing U.S. costs and developing Eurasia's potential to become more self-regulating in terms of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons;
- placing an emphasis on countering and competing with China, which poses a uniquely strong and multidimensional challenge to U.S. security and prosperity;
- working to strengthen the security architecture of the Indo-Pacific region under the FOIP construct;
- helping to broker breakthrough improvements in Israel's relations with other countries in the Middle East;
- exploring possibilities for improving relations where possible with countries such as Russia and North Korea; and
- making trade agreements more fair to the United States.

Some Related or Additional Issues

The following sections provide brief discussions of some related or additional issues for Congress regarding the U.S. role in the world.

Potential Impact of COVID-19 Pandemic

A new (i.e., since about March 2020) issue is the question of whether and how the global COVID-19 pandemic might lead to profoundly transformative and long-lasting changes in the U.S. role in the world in areas such as U.S. global leadership, China's potential for acting as a global leader, U.S. strategic competition with China, U.S. relations with allies, and U.S. definitions of U.S. national security. Some observers argue that the COVID-19 pandemic is the first major international crisis since World War II for which the United States has not served as the global leader for spearheading, organizing, or implementing an international response.

Another CRS report provides an overview of the potential implications of the COVID-19 pandemic for the international security environment and the U.S. role in the world, as well as a list of CRS reports addressing various aspects of this issue and examples of other writings addressing this issue from various perspectives,[5] See also some of the more recent writings cited in Appendix C of this CRS report.

Costs and Benefits of Allies

Within the overall debate over the U.S. role in the world, one long-standing specific question relates to the costs and benefits of allies. As noted earlier, some observers believe that under the [5] CRS Report R46336, COVID-19: Potential Implications for International Security Environment—Overview of Issues and Further Reading for Congress, by Ronald O'Rourke, Kathleen J. McInnis, and Michael Moodie.

Trump Administration, the United States has become more skeptical of the value of allies, particularly those in Europe, and more transactional in managing U.S. alliance relationships.

Skeptics of allies and alliances generally argue that their value to the United States is overrated; that allies are capable of defending themselves without U.S. help; that U.S. allies frequently act as free riders in their alliance relationships with the United States by shifting security costs to the United States; that in the absence of U.S. help, these allies would do more on their own to balance against potential regional hegemons; and that alliances create a risk of drawing the United States into conflicts involving allies over issues that are not vital to the United States.

Supporters of the U.S. approach to allies and alliances of the past 70 years, while acknowledging the free-rider issue as something that needs to be managed, generally argue that alliances are needed and valuable for preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia and for otherwise deterring potential regional aggression; that alliances form a significant advantage for the United States in its dealings with other major powers, such as Russia and China (both of which largely lack similar alliance networks); that although allies might be capable of defending themselves without U.S. help, they might also choose, in the absence of U.S. help, to bandwagon with would-be regional hegemons (rather than contribute to efforts to balance against them); that in addition to mutual defense benefits, alliances offer other benefits, particularly in peacetime, including sharing of intelligence, information, and technology and the cultivation of soft-power forms of cooperation; and that a transactional approach to alliances, which encourages the merits of each bilateral alliance relationship to be measured in isolation, overlooks the collective benefits of maintaining alliances with multiple countries in a region.

U.S. Public Opinion

U.S. public opinion can be an important factor in debates over the future U.S. role in the world. Among other things, public opinion can

- shape the political context (and provide the impulse) for negotiating the terms of, and for considering whether to become party to, international agreements;
- influence debates on whether and how to employ U.S. military force; and
- influence policymaker decisions on funding levels for defense, international affairs activities, and foreign assistance.

Foreign policy specialists, strategists, and policymakers sometimes invoke U.S. public opinion poll results in debates on the U.S. role in the world. One issue relating to U.S. public opinion that observers are discussing is the extent to which the U.S. public may now believe that U.S. leaders have broken a tacit social contract under which the U.S. public, and particularly the middle class, has supported the costs of U.S. global leadership in return for the promise of receiving certain benefits, particularly steady increases in real incomes and the standard of living.

Operation of U.S. Democracy

Another potential issue for Congress is how the operation of democracy in the United States might affect the U.S. role in the world, particularly in terms of defending and promoting democracy and criticizing and resisting authoritarian and illiberal forms of government.

During the Cold War, the effective operation of U.S. democracy at the federal level and lower levels was viewed as helpful for arguing on the world stage that Western-style democracy was superior, for encouraging other countries to adopt that model, and for inspiring people in the Soviet Union and other authoritarian countries to resist authoritarianism and seek change in the direction of more democratic forms of government. The ability of the United State to demonstrate the effectiveness of democracy as a form of government was something that in today's parlance would be termed an element of U.S. soft power.

The end of the Cold War led to a diminution in the ideological debate about the relative merits of democracy versus authoritarianism as forms of government. As a possible consequence, there may have been less of a perceived need during this period for focusing on the question of whether the operation of U.S. democracy was being viewed positively or otherwise by observers in other countries.

The shift in the international environment over the past few years from the post-Cold War era to an era of renewed great power competition[6] has led to a renewed ideological debate about the relative merits of Western-style democracy versus 21st-century forms of authoritarian and illiberal government. Articles in China's state-controlled media, for example, sometimes criticize the operation of U.S. democracy and argue that China's form of governance is more advantageous. The potential issue for Congress is whether, in a period of renewed ideological competition, there is now once again a need for focusing more on the question of whether the operation of U.S. democracy is being viewed positively or otherwise by observers in other countries.

Potential Implications for Congress as an Institution

Another issue for Congress is what implications a changed U.S. role in the world might have for Congress as an institution, particularly regarding the preservation and use of congressional powers and prerogatives relating to foreign policy, national security, and international economic policy, and more generally the role of Congress relative to that of the executive branch in U.S. foreign policymaking. Specific matters here include, among other things, the question of war powers, the delegation of authority for imposing tariffs, and whether a change in the U.S. role would have any implications for congressional organization, capacity, and operations.[7]

Reversibility of a Change in U.S. Role

Another potential issue for Congress is whether a change in the U.S. role in the world would at some point in the future be reversible, should U.S. policymakers in the future desire to return to a U.S. role in the world more like that of the past 70 years. Potential questions for Congress include the following:

- What elements of a change in the U.S. role in the world should be reversed, and what elements should be maintained?
- What elements of change in the U.S. role might be more reversible, less reversible, or irreversible? What elements might be less reversible due to technological developments, changes in international power dynamics, or changes in U.S. public opinion?
- How much time and effort would be required to implement a return to a U.S. role like that of the past 70 years?
- How might the issue of reversibility be affected by the amount of time that a change in the U.S. role remains in place before an attempt might be made to reverse it?

Appendix A. Glossary of Selected Terms

Role in the world

The term role in the world generally refers in foreign policy discussions to the overall character, purpose, or direction of a country's participation in international affairs or the country's overall relationship to the rest of the world. A country's role in the world can be taken as a visible expression of its grand strategy (see next item). In this report, the term U.S. role in the world is often shortened for convenience to U.S. role.

Grand strategy

The term grand strategy generally refers in foreign policy discussions to a country's overall approach for securing its interests and making its way in the world, using all the national instruments at its disposal, including diplomatic, informational, military, and economic tools (sometimes abbreviated in U.S. government parlance as DIME). A country's leaders might deem elements of a country's grand strategy to be secret, so that assessments, assumptions, or risks included in the strategy are not revealed to potential adversaries. Consequently, a country's leaders might say relatively little in public about the country's grand strategy. As mentioned above, however, a country's role in the world can be taken as a visible expression of its grand strategy. For the United States, grand strategy can be viewed as strategy at a global or interregional level, as opposed to U.S. strategies for individual regions, countries, or issues.

International order/world order

The term international order or world order generally refers in foreign policy discussions to the collection of organizations, institutions, treaties, rules, norms, and practices that are intended to organize, structure, and regulate international relations during a given historical period. International orders tend to be established by major world powers, particularly in the years following wars between major powers, though they can also emerge at other times. Though often referred to as if they are fully developed or firmly established situations, international orders are usually incomplete, partly aspirational, sometimes violated by their supporters, rejected (or at least not supported) by certain states and nonstate actors, and subject to various stresses and challenges.

Unipolar/bipolar/tripolar/multipolar

In foreign policy discussions, terms like unipolar, bipolar, tripolar, and multipolar are sometimes used to refer to the number of top-tier world powers whose actions tend to characterize or give structure to a given historical period's international security situation. The Cold War that lasted from the late 1940s to the late 1980s or early 1990s is usually described as a bipolar situation featuring a competition between two superpowers (the United States and the Soviet Union) and their allies. The post-Cold War era, which followed the Cold War, is sometimes described as the unipolar moment, with the United States being the unipolar power, meaning the world's sole superpower.

As discussed in another CRS report,[8] observers have concluded that in recent years, there has been a shift from the post-Cold War era to a new international security situation characterized by renewed great power competition between the United States, China, and Russia, leading observers to refer to the new situation as a tripolar or multipolar world. Observers who might list additional countries (or groups of countries, such as the European Union) as additional top-tier world powers, along with the United States, China, and Russia, might also use the term multipolar.

Eurasia

The term Eurasia is used in this report to refer to the entire land mass that encompasses both Europe and Asia, including its fringing islands, extending from Portugal on its western end to Japan on its eastern end, and from Russia's Arctic coast on its northern edge to India on its southern edge, and encompassing all the lands and countries in between, including those of Central Asia, Southwest Asia, South Asia, and Southeast Asia. Eurasia's fringing islands include, among others, the United Kingdom and Ireland in Europe, Sri Lanka in the Indian Ocean, the archipelagic countries of Southeast Asia, and Japan. There are also other definitions of Eurasia, some of which are more specialized and refer to subsets of the broad area described above.

Regional hegemon

The term regional hegemon generally refers to a country so powerful relative to the other countries in its region that it can dominate the affairs of that region and compel other countries in that region to support (or at least not oppose) the hegemon's key policy goals. The United States is generally considered to have established itself in the 19th century as the hegemon of the Western Hemisphere.

Spheres-of-influence world

The term spheres-of-influence world generally refers to a world that, in terms of its structure of international relations, is divided into multiple regions (i.e., spheres), each with its own hegemon. A spheres-of-influence world, like a multipolar world, is characterized by having multiple top-tier powers. In a spheres-of-influence world, however, at least some of those top-tier powers have achieved a status of regional hegemon, while in a multipolar world, few or none of those major world powers (other than the United States, the regional hegemon of the Western Hemisphere) have achieved a status of regional hegemon. As a result, in a spheres-of-influence world, international relations are more highly segmented on a regional basis than they are in a multipolar world.

Geopolitics

The term geopolitics is often used as a synonym for international politics or for strategy relating to international politics. More specifically, it refers to the influence of basic geographic features on international relations, and to the analysis of international relations from a perspective that places a strong emphasis on the influence of such geographic features. Basic geographic features involved in geopolitical analysis include things such as the relative sizes and locations of countries or land masses; the locations of key resources such as oil or water; geographic barriers

Hard power and soft power

In foreign policy discussions, the term hard power generally refers to coercive power, particularly military and economic power, while the term soft power generally refers to the ability to persuade or attract support, particularly through diplomacy, development assistance, support for international organizations, education and cultural exchanges, and the international popularity of cultural elements such as music, movies, television shows, and literature.

Appendix B. Past U.S. Role vs. More Restrained Role

This appendix provides additional discussion on the debate over whether the United States should attempt to continue playing the active internationalist role that it has played for the past 70 years, or instead adopt a more restrained role that reduces U.S. involvement in world affairs.

Among U.S. strategists and foreign policy specialists, advocates of a more restrained U.S. role include (to cite a few examples) Andrew Bacevich, Doug Bandow, Ted Galen Carpenter, John Mearsheimer, Barry Posen, Christopher Preble, William Ruger, and Stephen Walt. These and other authors have offered multiple variations on the idea of a more restrained U.S. role. Terms such as offshore balancing, offshore control, realism, strategy of restraint, or retrenchment have been used to describe some of these variations.[9] These variations on the idea of a more restrained U.S. role would not necessarily match in their details a changed U.S. role that might be pursued by the Trump Administration.[10]

Arguments in Favor of a More Restrained U.S. Role

Observers advocating a more restrained U.S. role in the world make various arguments regarding the United States and other countries. Arguments that they make relating to the United States include the following:

- Costs and benefits. In terms of human casualties, financial and economic impacts, diplomatic impacts, and impacts on domestic U.S. values, politics, and society, the costs to the United States of defending and promoting the liberal international order have been underestimated and the benefits have been overestimated. U.S. interventions in the security affairs of Eurasia have frequently been more costly and/or less successful than anticipated, making a strategy of intervening less cost-effective in practice than in theory. U.S. interventions can also draw the United States into conflicts involving other countries over issues that are not vital or important U.S. interests.
- Capacity. Given projections regarding future U.S. budget deficits and debt, the United States in coming years will no longer be able to afford to play as expansive a role in the world as it has played for the past 70 years. Overextending U.S. participation in international affairs could lead to excessive

[9] The terms offshore balancing and offshore control refer in general to a policy in which the United States, in effect, stands off the shore of Eurasia and engages in the security affairs of Eurasia less frequently, less directly, or less expansively. The term retrenchment is more often used by critics of these proposed approaches.

[10] Debate about this dimension of the U.S. role in the world is not limited to one between those who favor continued extensive engagement along the lines of the past 70 years and those who prefer some form of a more restrained role—other options are also being promoted. For example, one analyst and former White House aide advocates an approach that differs from both retrenchment and reassertion, an approach he labels "re-calibration" to the "geopolitical, economic, technological and other dynamics driving the 21st-century world." Such an approach, he argues, would entail a reappraisal of U.S. interests, a reassessment of U.S. power, and a repositioning of U.S. leadership. (See Bruce Jentleson, "Apart, Atop, Amidst: America in the World," War on the Rocks, January 2017.)

As another example, a different analyst argues in favor of a U.S. role based on "a better nationalism"—what he describes as a more benign and constructive form that "would not dismantle the post-war order and America's post war project, but would take a harder-edged and more disciplined approach to asserting U.S. interests." (Hal Brands, "U.S. Grand Strategy in an Age of Nationalism: Fortress American and it Alternatives," Washington Quarterly, Spring 2017: 73-93.)

amounts of federal debt and inadequately addressed domestic problems, leaving the United States poorly positioned for sustaining any future desired level of international engagement.

- Past 70 years as a historical aberration. The U.S. role of the past 70 years is an aberration when viewed against the U.S. historical record dating back to 1776, which is a history characterized more by periods of restraint than by periods of high levels of international engagement. Returning to a more restrained U.S. role would thus return U.S. policy to what is, historically, a more traditional policy for the United States.
- Moral standing. The United States has not always lived up to its own ideals, and consequently lacks sufficient moral standing to pursue a role that involves imposing its values and will on other countries. Attempting to do that through an interventionist policy can also lead to an erosion of those values at home.
- Public opinion. It is not clear that U.S. public opinion supports the idea of attempting to maintain a U.S. role in the world as expansive as that of the past 70 years, particularly if it means making trade-offs against devoting resources to domestic U.S. priorities. In public opinion polls, Americans often express support for a more restrained U.S. role, particularly on issues such as whether the United States should act as the world's police force, funding levels for U.S. foreign assistance programs, U.S. participation in (and financial support for) international organizations, and U.S. defense expenditures for defending allies.

- Growing wealth and power. Given the rapid growth in wealth and power in recent years of China and other countries, the United States is no longer as dominant globally as it once was, and is becoming less dominant over time, which will make it increasingly difficult or expensive and/or less appropriate for the United States to attempt to continue playing a role of global leadership.
- Ideas about international order. Other world powers, such as China, have their own ideas about international order, and these ideas do not match all aspects of the current liberal international order. The United States should acknowledge the changing global distribution of power and work with China and other countries to define a new international order that incorporates ideas from these other countries.
- Eurasia as self-regulating. Given the growth in the economies of U.S. allies and partners in Europe and Asia since World War II, these allies and partners are now more capable of looking after their own security needs, and Eurasia can now be more self-regulating in terms of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons in Eurasia. Consequently, the level of U.S. intervention in the affairs of Eurasia can be reduced without incurring undue risk that regional hegemons will emerge there. The current substantial level of U.S. intervention in the affairs of Eurasia discourages countries in Eurasia from acting more fully on their own to prevent the emergence of regional hegemons.
- Hegemons and spheres of influence. Even if one or more regional hegemons were to emerge in Eurasia, this would not pose an unacceptable situation for the United States—vital U.S. interests could still be defended. Similarly, the emergence of a spheres-of-influence world need not be unacceptable for the United States, because such a world would again not necessarily be incompatible with vital U.S. interests.

Arguments in Favor of Continuing U.S. Role of the Past 70 Years

Observers who support a continuation of the U.S. role in the world of the past 70 years generally reject the above arguments and argue the opposite. Arguments that these observers make relating to the United States include the following:

- Costs and benefits. Although the costs to the United States of its role in the world over the past 70 years have been substantial, the benefits have been greater. The benefits are so long-standing that they can easily be taken for granted or underestimated. U.S. interventions in the security affairs of Eurasia, though not without significant costs and errors, have been successful in preventing wars between major powers and defending and promoting vital U.S. interests and values. A more restrained U.S. role in the world might be less expensive for the United States in the short run, but would create a risk of damaging U.S. security, liberty, and prosperity over the longer run by risking the emergence of regional hegemons or a spheres-of-influence world.
- Capacity. Projections regarding future U.S. budget deficits and debt need to be taken into account, but even in a context of limits on U.S. resources, the United States is a wealthy country that can choose to play an expansive role in international affairs, and the costs to the United States of playing a more restrained role in world affairs may in the long run be much greater than the costs of playing a more expansive role. Projections regarding future U.S. budget deficits and debt are driven primarily by decisions on revenues and domestic mandatory expenditures rather than by decisions on defense and foreign-policy-related expenditures. Consequently, these projections are an argument for getting the country's fiscal house in order primarily in terms of revenues and domestic mandatory expenditures, rather than an argument for a more restrained U.S. role in the world.
- Past 70 years as a historical aberration. Although a restrained U.S. foreign policy may have been appropriate for the United States in the 18th and 19th centuries, the world of the 18th and 19th centuries was quite different. For example, given changes in communication, transportation, and military technologies since the 18th and 19th centuries, the Atlantic and Pacific oceans are much less effective as geographic buffers between the United States and Eurasia today than they were in the 18th and 19th centuries. Experiences in more recent decades (including World Wars I and II and the Cold War) show that a more restrained U.S. foreign policy would now be riskier or more costly over the long run than an engaged U.S. foreign policy.
- Moral standing. The United States, though not perfect, retains ample moral authority—and responsibility—to act as a world leader, particularly in comparison to authoritarian countries such as China or Russia.
- Public opinion. Other public opinion poll results show that Americans support a U.S. global leadership role.

Arguments that these observers make relating to other countries include the following:

- Growing wealth and power. Although the wealth and power of countries such as China have grown considerably in recent years, future rates of growth for those countries are open to question. China faces the prospect of declining rates of economic growth and the aging and eventual shrinkage of its population, while Russia has a relatively small economy and is experiencing demographic decline. The United States has one of the most favorable demographic situations of any major power, and retains numerous advantages in terms of economic and financial strength, military power, technology, and capacity for innovation. Although the United States is no longer as dominant globally as it once was, it remains the world's most powerful country, particularly when all dimensions of power are taken into consideration.
- Ideas about international order. The liberal international order reflects U.S. interests and values; a renegotiated international order incorporating ideas from authoritarian countries such as China would produce a world less conducive to defending and promoting U.S. interests and values. Americans have long lived in a world reflecting U.S. interests and values and would not welcome a world incorporating Chinese values on issues such as the rule of law; the scope of civil society; political and human rights; freedom of speech, the press, and information; and privacy and surveillance.
- Eurasia as self-regulating. Eurasia historically has not been self-regulating in terms of preventing the emergence of regional hegemons, and the idea that it will become self-regulating in the future is a risky and untested proposition.
- Hegemons and spheres of influence. A regional hegemon in Eurasia would have enough economic and other power to be able to threaten vital U.S. interests. In addition to threatening U.S. access to the economies of Eurasia, a spheres-of-influence world would be prone to war because regional hegemons historically are never satisfied with the extent of their hegemonic domains and eventually seek to expand them, coming into conflict with other hegemons. Leaders of regional hegemons are also prone to misjudgment and miscalculation regarding where their spheres collide.

Chinese AVIC company delivers 50th Wing Loong II MALE drone

Aviation Defense News January 2021 aerospace air force industry

POSTED ON WEDNESDAY, 06 JANUARY 2021 12:19

Chengdu-based AVIC UAS, a drone branch of the State-owned Aviation Industry Corporation of China (AVIC), has delivered the 50th Wing Loong II drone, the company said in a statement released on its WeChat account last week. It did not give further details about the delivery, or the identity of the client. Liu Xuanzun reports on Global Times.

Compared with the Wing Loong I, the first entry in the Wing Loong drone series, the Wing Loong II is aimed at high-end users in the international market as it is equipped with more advanced technologies, a Chinese military expert who requested anonymity told the Global Times on January 5. Having exported 50 Wing Loong II drones shows that China can now target the world's high-end drone market, the expert said.

More types of advanced Chinese drones, including stealth-capable ones that have made appearances in air shows, could get international customers in the future, the expert predicted.

AVIC started exporting the domestically developed Wing Loong series in 2010, including the Wing Loong I, the Wing Loong I-D and the Wing Loong II. A total of 100 had been exported by the end of 2018, the Xinhua News Agency reported in December 2018.

By early 2019, Wing Loong series drones operated by different clients have fired more than 3,000 rounds of live munitions with an overall accuracy rate higher than 90 percent on both stationary and moving battlefield targets, China Central Television reported at that time.

The Wing Loong II is an improved version of the Wing Loong 1 UAV in the category of MALE (Medium-Altitude Long-Endurance). Aviation Industry Corporation of China (AVIC) unveiled the concept of Wing Loong II at the Aviation Expo China in Beijing in September 2015 and a prototype of the Wing Loong II was presented for the first time to the public during the Airshow China exhibition, held in Zhuhai from 1-6 November, 2016. It was also presented for the first time in Europe during the Paris Air Show in June 2017.

Compared with Wing Loong I, the Wing Loong II has an optimized aerodynamic design, an improved airframe and upgraded airborne systems, featuring better capabilities in terms of flight, payload and information capacity, In March 2017, a prototype of the Wing Loong II conducted a 31- minute test flight from an unidentified airport in northwestern China.

Milrem Robotics rolls out new Type-X RCV combat vehicle

Defense News January 2021 Global Security army industry

POSTED ON THURSDAY, 07 JANUARY 2021 09:15

The medium class Type-X Robotic Combat Vehicle developed by the European leading robotics and autonomous systems developer Milrem Robotics passed its initial mobility tests. The Type-X RCV designed to support mechanized units was first announced in summer 2020.

The Type-X will become an intelligent wingman to main battle tanks and infantry fighting vehicles capable of taking on the most dangerous tasks and positions, which result in lower lethality risk. “The Type-X will provide equal or overmatching firepower and tactical usage to a unit equipped with Infantry Fighting vehicles. It provides means to breach enemy defensive positions with minimal risk for own troops and replacing a lost RCV is purely a logistical nuance,” said Kuldar Väärsi, CEO of Milrem Robotics.

The Type-X can be fitted with a cannon up to 50 mm. With up to a 30 mm cannon the RCV is also airdroppable - the C-130J and the KC-390 can carry one Type-X, an A400M two and a C-17 5 of them. “The vehicle will be equipped with intelligent functions such as follow-me, waypoint navigation and obstacle detection with Artificial Intelligence being part of the algorithms,” Väärsi said. “Also, Milrem Robotics’ software developers have taken a totally new and innovative approach to allow remote controlled operations on higher speeds.”

The low weight of 12 tons of the Type-X and high power with efficient power management provide a superior terrain capability and its low height of 2.2 m and a rear engine provide low visual and heat signature.

In addition, the Type-X is approximately three to four times lighter and its cost significantly lower than that of a conventional IFV. It has been designed with intelligent predictive maintenance combined with a Health and Usage Monitoring System and Line Replacement Unit principle to ensure a low Through Lifecycle Cost and logistic footprint. Also, its hybrid powertrain and rubber tracks will reduce lifecycle costs significantly.

To develop the Type-X RCV Milrem Robotics utilized its knowledge gained from developing its flagship product the THeMIS Unmanned Ground Vehicle, intended to support dismounted troops, that has already been acquired by ten countries, seven of which are members of NATO.

China Teases H-20 Stealth Bomber in PLA Recruitment Video

Our Bureau 08:41 AM, January 7, 2021 405

Unknown aircraft with flying-wing design spotted in PLAAF 2021 recruitment video.

The Chinese People's Liberation Army Air Force (PLAAF) gave a sneak peek at the design of its new H-60 next-generation, long-range strategic stealth bomber in the service's 2021 recruitment video released Tuesday.

At the far end of the video, an unknown aircraft rendered in computer-generated imagery enters the stage. Reflection in the goggles of a pilot's helmet provided a good view of the bulky aircraft. It appears to have a flying-wing design with two intakes on the back of the plane. It has no visible tail wings and no winglets on the tips of the wings.

Chinese experts speculated the mystery warplane could be long-anticipated H-20 bomber.

"Judging from the newly released outline, the H-20 could look similar to the U.S. military's B-2 bomber as expected, and its radar cross section will be minimal," Wei Dongxu, a Beijing-based military analyst, told the Global Timeson Wednesday.

Reflection of the mystery aircraft in goggles of a pilot's helmet.

This could mean that China has achieved a generation-leaping development in bomber planes and become in possession of a world-class strategic stealth bomber, Wei said.

State-owned Aviation Industry Corp of China (AVIC) in a promotional video in May 2018, revealed only the front outline of a similar aircraft, covered in a blanket. Experts had predicted it could be PLA's new H-60 bomber jet boasting 12,000 km - range and 20 tons carrying capacity.

The H-20 has been the subject of speculation for a long time, and now the Air Force has displayed its vague outline in a recruitment video. This possibly means the outline and design of the aircraft are no longer top secrets, and the development project has made significant progresses, Wei said.

"We might be able to see a real H-20 soon," Wei predicted.

Eco-Fascism: More than Tree-Loving Terrorists

GNET Insights Eco-Fascism: More than Tree-Loving Terrorists

By Friederike Wegener
6th January 2021
In Insights

The climate and ecological crisis was one of the dominating issues in 2019. Boosted by the visible environmental and ecological consequences of global lockdowns in spring of this year, the question of climate change continues to occupy an important place on the international political and public agenda. Creating schisms in society along age groups and political orientation, radical actors use the growing discordance to hijack the debate on countering climate change by injecting their nativist and racist ideas. In particular, the extreme-right ideology of eco-fascism gained notoriety, when the perpetrator of the Christchurch terrorist attack (15 March 2019) referred to himself as an eco-fascist, and the gunman of the El Paso attack (3 August 2019) reasoned his killings with eco-fascist ideas.

Eco-fascists blame the overpopulation of the global south for emissions and resource scarcity leading to environmental degradation. They see migration as proof of the "great replacement" of the "white race" and as responsible for environmental damage in the West. In parallel, eco-fascists blame the consumerism of the West for the current climate and ecological crisis, pushed through the capitalist system created by Jewish elites. Gaining popularity over the course of the last two years, eco-fascism originates in the ideas of 19th and 20th century thinkers, such as

Ernst Haeckel and Madison Grant, and is deeply rooted in Nazi ideology. The national socialist notion of 'Blut und Boden' (blood and soil) claims a connection between racial identity and the respective land. It stipulates that race determines the ideal area of settlement, which needs to be kept pure, without alien and undesirable elements.

In the aftermath of the 2019 attacks and with the onset of the global COVID-19 crisis, mainstream social media saw a rise of memes promoting eco-fascist ideas. This included the narrative depicting the virus as the cure to human overpopulation and destruction of the planet. The re-emergence of eco-fascism, in the context of omnipresent debates on the climate and ecological crisis, showing disruptive tendencies across societies, is no coincidence. For several reasons, it should be treated as a worrisome and emerging threat.

Firstly, in light of drastic environmental and ecological consequences, it is likely that factions of the non-violent far-right will stop denying climate change and instead use it as an emotive argument against migration and "non-whites". Thereby, non-violent actors offer a stage to eco-fascist ideology by blaming migration and overpopulation of the global south as oversimplified answers to a complex phenomenon. Adopting this environmental cape allows for the spread of masked far-right ideology and is used to broaden the field of voters and potential recruits. Violent actors alike disguise racist and nativist ideas behind environmental concerns to lure in young people and environmental activists to their violent extreme-right ideology. Spreading hashtags on Twitter, such as #treesnotrefugees and #MakeEcologyDeepAgain, #EFDS (Eco-Fascist Death Squads – referring to violent solutions against overpopulation) or slogans like "Love Nature, Kill Non-Whites" and "Save Bees, Plant Trees, Shoot Refugees" show the brutal underpinning of the movement. Non-violent actors promoting the ideas of eco-fascism might act as a gateway to more violent parts of the movement.

This leads to the second concern: far-right extremists abuse the legitimate sense of urgency created by mostly non-violent environmentalists to justify violence. In addition to the two fatal shootings of 2019, the now-defunct group, The Green Brigade, committed an arson attack on a mink farm in Sweden in January 2020. While not having an inherent Nazi-ideology, the eco-terrorist group, Individualistsas Tendiendo A Lo Salvaje/Individualists Tending toward the Savage [ITS], welcomed the fascist terror attacks and praised the Christchurch killing. ITS is responsible for targeted mail bombings and bombings in public spaces. Since 2011, they have committed 29 attacks, the majority taking place at accelerating pace since 2016, across Latin and North America, as well as Europe. Using the narrative of imminent environmental extinction to promote violent acts and creating an apocalyptic atmosphere also leads to eco-fascists closing ranks with accelerationist factions of the extreme-right. The two now-defunct terrorist organisations, Atomwaffen Division (AWD) and National Action, for instance, referenced eco-fascists ideas in their activism, including organised hikes to reconnect with the land. Scottish Dawn, consisting of several former members of National Action, used "Blood and Soil" as its primary slogan. Despite eco-fascism being a fringe movement and most of its members remaining 'online warriors' creating propaganda items, the described actions underline the violent potential of eco-fascism.

Thirdly, the threat of eco-fascism has a global dimension. Beyond the cells of ITS in Latin America, North America and Europe, the Eastern European network, Greenline Front, had satellites in Argentina, Belarus, Russia, Serbia, Switzerland and four European states. The Green Brigade had claimed to have members in the US, the United Kingdom and Sweden, while also being in close interaction with members from the US-American AWD and European Misanthropic Division.

In addition to these trans-national groups, lone wolf perpetrators also show global connections. make references to other eco-fascists around the globe. The Christchurch perpetrator for instance said to be inspired by the eco-fascist ideas of Norwegian terrorist Andres Breivik. The motivations behind the Christchurch massacre in turn inspired the US-shooter of El-Paso. This underlines the need for security services and political actors to treat eco-fascism as a global threat.

Countering the extreme-right's efforts to hijack and distort the debate around the climate and ecological crisis is a challenge we will have to face, on the one hand, to prevent aggravating rifts in societies and a growing extremist potential and, on the other hand, to find much needed solutions to protect our environment. This is increasingly important considering the convergence of pending aggravating natural disasters and adverse social consequences and the efforts of the far-right to hijack and distort the debate. This convergence is the ideal breeding ground for eco-fascism and has created the potential for violence. Despite eco-fascism not representing the main threat within the extreme-right for the time being, it should not be overlooked due to its disruptive and violent tendencies, as well as future relevance.

Russia's Northern Fleet Upgraded to Military District Status

(Source: Navy Recognition)

On January 1, 2021, Russia's Northern Fleet was officially upgraded to the status of a Military District (MD), as part of a reorganization of the overall system of MDs. This marks a significant change to the national organizational structure of the MDs in Russia; and it marks the first major shift away from the concept of reducing and simplifying the number and functions of these, which, since 2010, have also had the status of Joint Strategic Commands (Obyedinennyye Strategicheskoye Komandovanie—OSK). The reform in 2010 reduced the number of Russian MDs from six to four (Western, Southern, Central and Eastern) and subordinated all military units and assets within each MD to the contiguous, respective OSK. In effect, the Northern Fleet has now gained both the status of an MD and OSK, and this may well be a prelude to future organizational modifications within the Russian Armed Forces (Interfax, January 4, 2021).

Last month (December 21, 2020), President Vladimir Putin signed an ukaz (decree) to upgrade the Northern Fleet to MD status, effective from January 1, 2021: "To consider the Northern Fleet an inter-specific strategic territorial association of the Armed Forces of the Russian Federation, performing the tasks of a military district." According to the ukaz, the change is associated with measures to protect the integrity and inviolability of the Russian Federation and to defend the country's northern borders as well as Moscow's evolving interests in the Arctic (Izvestia, December 21, 2020).

Earlier, in June, Putin signed a preliminary ukaz declaring that the Northern Fleet would henceforth have the status of a separate military-administrative unit. Additionally, some portions of the Western MD were "cut" and moved to the new Northern Fleet MD: the Republic of Komi, the Arkhangelsk and Murmansk regions, as well as the Nenets Autonomous District. The former Commander of the Northern Fleet, Admiral Vyacheslav Popov explained, "From January 1, 2021, the Northern Fleet will de jure perform the tasks of the military district, which exist de facto. This, in particular, involves the solution of issues of mobilization, conscription, interaction with authorities, [as well as] the creation and development of the infrastructure of the Northern Sea Route" (Rossyiskaya Gazeta, December 22, 2020).

The commander of the Northern Fleet, Admiral Alexander Moiseev also noted the Arctic dimension in this latest administrative change: "By the decree of the president of the Russian Federation, the status of the Northern Fleet from January 1, 2021, is legally equated to the status of the military district as the main military-administrative unit preparing for armed defense and the very protection of the integrity and inviolability of the Russian Federation, including territories within the boundaries of its subjects, along a certain strategic direction—the Arctic." In December 2014, the Northern Fleet was officially withdrawn from the Western MD and, on its basis, the authorities formed the North OSK, which was reinforced with assets drawn from the other MDs (Interfax, January 4, 2021).

On January 4, Admiral Moiseev stated that the primary task of the Northern Fleet will remain to maintain the combat readiness of the naval strategic nuclear forces: "Based on its mission, the group is kept in constant readiness to carry out the tasks of deterrence from unleashing aggression against the Russian Federation" (Izvestia, January 4, 2021). However, the Northern Fleet will also continue to spearhead Russia's ongoing exploration and patrolling of Arctic waters. Two days earlier, the fleet headquarters confirmed plans to conduct an expedition to the Novaya Zemlya archipelago in the summer of 2021. The study of the Arctic will continue, together with the assistance of the Russian Geographical Society (Izvestia, January 3, 2021).

The Northern Fleet commander additionally noted that submarines will remain active in Arctic waters. According to Moiseev, "[T]he submariners of the Northern Fleet will continue the practice of ice sailing in the Arctic Ocean, as well as performing combat patrol and combat duty tasks in other areas of the World Ocean." In 2020, as part of the modernization of the Russian Military-Maritime Fleet (Voyenno-Morskoy Flot—VMF), the Northern Fleet received into service a Borei-A strategic missile submarine, the Knyaz Vladimir. This is the second standard (strategic submarine) carrier of the Bulava intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) in the Northern Fleet. In December 2020, during the testing of the strategic nuclear forces, the Karelia strategic missile submarine in the Northern Fleet successfully launched the Sineva ICBM from a designated area in the Barents Sea at the Kura test site in Kamchatka. Currently, Project 667BDRM Delfin submarines, armed with Sineva ICBMs, together with the new Borei-A submarines armed with Bulava ICBMs, form the backbone of Russia's naval strategic nuclear forces (Hibiny.com, January 4, 2021).

This latest change to the status of the Northern Fleet seems to conclude the process that began in December 2014. It appears to walk back the conceptual idea of the OSK; but in real terms, it offers a unique role to the Northern Fleet that is not afforded to any other part of the VMF. Since 2010, the fleets and Caspian Flotilla were subordinate to each respective OSK; now the Northern Fleet has the same status as the other four MDs/OSKs. Driven by what the political-military leadership considers Russia's long-term strategic interests in the Arctic (see EDM, June 18, 2018, March 16, 2020, November 9, 2020), this upgrade to the status of the Northern Fleet is a powerful signal to other actors of the importance of this region in Russian defense planning.

Russian MoD received 2,700 weapon systems in 2020

by Dmitry Fediushko & Nikolai Novichkov

The Russian Ministry of Defence (MoD) received some 2,700 major weapon systems and 52,500 support systems in 2020, Deputy Defence Minister Alexey Krivoruchko told the ministry's Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) newspaper on 30 December.

Russia's stealthy Okhotnik heavy UAV conducting a manned/unmanned teaming test flight with an Su-57 fighter. In 2020 the Russian MoD gave priority to unmanned aviation and received its first serial production Su-57. (Russian MoD)

"The troops received 147 aircraft, the first reconnaissance and strike unmanned aerial systems [UASs] with Inokhodets [Pacing Horse] and Forpost [Outpost] unmanned aerial vehicles [UAVs], seven surface ships and two submarines, more than 1,500 land platforms, some 300 missile and artillery systems, and approximately 150 air defence weapons," said Krivoruchko.

The military will also receive 94 fixed- and rotary-wing aircraft, including 22 Su-57 multirole combat aircraft, ahead of schedule through 2024.

In 2022 the MoD is planning to complete the development of the T-14 Armata main battle tank, T-15 Armata, B-11 Kurganets-25, and K-17 Bumerang infantry fighting vehicles, B-10 Kurganets-25 and K-16 Bumerang armoured personnel carriers, the T-16 armoured recovery vehicle, the Koalitsiya-SV 152 mm self-propelled howitzer, and a number of advanced combat stations for tracked and wheeled combat platforms, according to Krivoruchko. "We are planning to complete trials of the S-500 air defence system and to adopt it and to accept the Voronezh very-high-frequency radar into service," he said.

The deputy minister reported that pop-up tests have already been conducted with the new Sarmat intercontinental ballistic missile, adding, "We will soon begin flight trials of this system."

China draws comparison between storming of U.S. Capitol, HK protests

By Reuters Staff

BEIJING (Reuters) - China drew a comparison on Thursday between the storming of the U.S. Capitol by supporters of President Donald Trump and last year's often-violent pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong, but noted that no one had died when demonstrators took over the legislature of the China-ruled city.

Slideshow (3 images)

Clips of the chaotic scenes from Washington aired repeatedly on Chinese state television.

Chinese foreign ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying told a daily briefing said that while events in Hong Kong in 2019, when the city's legislature was stormed, were more "severe" than those in Washington, "not one demonstrator died".

Relations between Beijing and Washington are at their worst in decades over a range of disputes, including China's heavy clampdown on Hong Kong, and Chinese diplomats and state media often draw attention to news of violence or chaos in the United States.

Months of anti-government protests in Hong Kong in 2019 included the July 1 storming of the city's legislature, in a campaign for democratic reforms that Beijing ultimately quashed with new national security legislation. One man died after falling from a parking lot during one protest in the city.

Police in Washington said four people died and 52 were arrested after Trump supporters stormed the U.S. Capitol on Wednesday in an attempt to stop Congress from certifying President-elect Joe Biden's election victory.

"We also wish that U.S. people can enjoy peace, stability and security as soon as possible," Hua said.

Hua also condemned U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's comments in which he said Washington may sanction those involved in the arrest of over 50 people in Hong Kong and will send the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations to visit Taiwan.

A comment with thousands of favourable votes on China's Twitter-like Weibo said the Washington protests were "over 90%" the same as those in Hong Kong. European leaders were showing "double standards" in condemning one but not the other, it said.

"The response and words used by some in the U.S. to what happened in Hong Kong in 2019 were completely different to what they used for today's ongoing events in the U.S.," Hua said.

Around the world, leaders expressed shock and concern, condemning the attempted subversion of democracy.

"What happened today in Washington DC is not American, definitely," French President Emmanuel Macron said in a video message on Twitter.

Russia's deputy U.N. Ambassador Dmitry Polyanskiy likened the images to protests in Ukraine that toppled Russian-backed President of Ukraine Viktor Yanukovich in 2014.

"Some of my friends ask whether someone will distribute crackers to the protesters to echo the Victoria Nuland stunt," he tweeted, citing a 2013 visit to Ukraine when then-U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Victoria Nuland offered food to protesters.

China gears up for space station, cargo and crewed mission launches

by Andrew Jones — January 7, 2021

China's human spaceflight agency is also soliciting proposals for low-cost cargo transportation to orbital outpost

HELSINKI — China is preparing to launch three major missions in the next few months to initiate the construction phase of the country's space station project.

The China Academy of Launch Vehicle Technology (CALT) is finalizing work on rockets which will launch the first space station module, a cargo and refueling craft and a crewed mission.

The launches will be the first of 11 planned missions to construct a three-module Chinese space station. The activity marks the beginning of the end phase of a project approved in 1992 to develop human spaceflight capabilities and establish a long-term crewed presence in low Earth orbit.

A 849-metric-ton Long March 5B heavy-lift rocket will launch the roughly 22-metric-ton Tianhe space station core module this spring. The launcher is currently undergoing final work in a factory in the northern port city Tianjin.

The rocket components will soon be transported by Yuanwang cargo ships to Wenchang Satellite Launch Center on the southern island of Hainan, according to CMSA, China's human spaceflight agency.

A launch date has not been released but the mission will likely take place around two months after the arrival of the Long March 5B to Wenchang. Previous Long March 5 series missions have required such a period for launch preparations.

"We will soon complete the construction of China's first long-term orbital crewed space station meeting advanced world levels, and will carry out large-scale space scientific research on it," Zhou Jianping, chief designer of China's human spaceflight program, told CCTV recently.

"We firmly believe that it will play a major role in the forefront of scientific exploration of humanity and also in the development of our space technology," Zhou said.

Chinese space station launch, delays

Launch of the core module was planned for 2018 with subsequent modules to follow around 2020 and 2022. However a launch failure and subsequent issues with the Long March 5 rocket means China is now condensing the schedule into an intensive two-year period.

The 16.6-meter-long, 4.2-meter-diameter Tianhe core module was developed by the China Academy of Space Technology (CAST) and is already at Wenchang. It underwent fit checks with the first flight model of the Long March 5B, which features China's largest payload fairing, in early 2020.

The module will provide the main living quarters for three astronauts for periods of around six months. It includes a docking hub and will also control the station's orbit and attitude.

Tianhe is planned to be inserted directly into a low Earth orbit with an apogee of around 370 kilometers and inclined by 41 degrees. A test flight for the mission in April 2020 saw the first Long March 5B launch a prototype new generation crew spacecraft. The new, uncrewed craft was loaded with propellant to simulate a payload similar in mass to a space station module.

Notably the rocket's large core stage reached orbital velocity and uncontrolled reentry off the west coast of Africa, passing over New York just minutes earlier. A similar event can thus be expected for the upcoming launch.

After completion in 2022 the Chinese Space Station will be joined by a co-orbiting, Hubble-class space telescope. The Xuntian survey telescope will be able to dock with the CSS for maintenance and repairs. The space station itself could also be expanded from three to six modules.

Cargo, crewed missions to follow

Once in orbit the Tianhe module will be visited by the Tianzhou-2 cargo spacecraft. This will be launched by a Long March 7 kerosene-liquid oxygen rocket from Wenchang. That launcher is currently undergoing final assembly.

Tianzhou cargo spacecraft have a mass of up to 13.5 tons and differing pressurized and unpressurized variants. Tianzhou-1 was launched in April 2017 to test technologies crucial to establishing and maintaining a space station.

The mission successfully tested a number of rendezvous and docking maneuvers and verified automated refuelling in microgravity with the Tiangong-2 space lab. The Tiangong lab also tested regenerative life support and a robotic arm for the larger, future space station.

This will be followed by the Shenzhou-12 crewed mission. This will launch on a Long March 2F, an older generation hypergolic rocket, from Jiuquan in the Gobi Desert.

It will be China's first crewed mission since 2016. Zhou Jianping has previously stated that the crew have already been selected.

The astronauts are expected to carry out a number of extravehicular activities during the mission. The identity of the crew will likely remain secret until days or weeks before launch.

The Shenzhou-12 spacecraft will also feature an upgraded guidance, navigation and control system (GNC) to meet new mission demands, according to a 2017 report (Chinese).

The mission's Long March 2F is undergoing testing in a final assembly facility in Beijing. Work is expected to be completed following the Chinese New Year (Feb. 12).

No clear schedule for the launches has been published. It is also unclear how soon after the two experiment modules will follow Tianhe into orbit. However the reports on launch vehicle preparations suggest the missions will follow relatively quickly after the module launch.

Chinese commercial resupply?

The Chinese Space Station, sometimes referred to as Tiangong (also the name for two small testbed space labs), is expected to be completed and enter normal operations in 2022 orbiting between 340-420 kilometers above the Earth.

CMSA announced Wednesday (Chinese) a solicitation for proposals for low-cost cargo transportation to assist space station operations.

The call aims to explore low-cost cargo transportation methods, create a supplement to the Tianzhou cargo delivery system, and build a "flexible, efficient, diverse, and low-cost cargo transportation system."

Main requirements for cargo delivery include a payload capacity of 1-4 tons, possibility for removing and deorbiting station waste to prevent space debris, and transportation costs to be inline with international levels.

For returning cargo to Earth, requirements are for a payload 100-300 kilograms with the returning spacecraft to be easily tracked and recovered.

Actors are required to submit proposals by Feb. 28, including technical descriptions, spacecraft capabilities, and cost and engineering analyses.

The call is understood to be open to both state-owned space sector entities and new commercial actors, which have emerged since late 2014. The latter, nascent grouping is in the earlier phases of developing light and medium-lift launch vehicles and likely lack the required capabilities, expertise and resources.

The call for proposals is notable however for being open to outside entrants. Such missions and activities have so far been carried out by the China Aerospace Aerospace Science and Technology Corp. (CASC), China's state-owned main space contractor.

Other actors such as sister conglomerate CASIC and nominally private firms were previously understood to be restricted to competing for commercial missions only. This indicates China is considering furthering commercialization of its space activities.

Putin Silent on Washington Unrest as Russian Foreign Ministry Calls U.S. Electoral System Archaic

Updated: 2 minutes ago

President Vladimir Putin made no statement on the unprecedented chaos in the United States when he spoke briefly with journalists after attending an Orthodox Christmas service, while Russia's Foreign Ministry said the U.S electoral process is archaic and prone to violations.

A rampaging mob of Trump supporters on Wednesday stormed a session of Congress being held to certify Joe Biden's election win, triggering violence and accusations the president was attempting a coup.

“The events in Washington show that the U.S. electoral process is archaic, does not meet modern standards and is prone to violations,” the state-run RIA Novosti news agency quoted Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova as saying.

Other world leaders expressed shock and outrage at the events, with French President Emmanuel Macron saying “What happened today in Washington is not American,” and British Prime Minister Boris Johnson condemning the “disgraceful scenes.”

Here are the reactions from other Russian public figures and politicians, and in the country's media:

— The leader of Russia’s Communist Party Gennady Zyuganov said in a statement:

“The boomerang came back to them. It was them that launched color revolutions. In fifty years they carried out three dozen, if not more. They toppled the leaders in North Africa and Yugoslavia and ousted a normal government in Ukraine, they had a go at Belarus last year. Well, now they are paying for it.”

— Leading opposition figure Alexei Navalny tweeted:

“Putinists are jubilant at the chaos in the United States and are praising ‘Putin's stability.’ Of course, there are problems there. Many. But in the USA, there is still an average monthly salary, of about 306,000 rubles. In the Russian Federation, according to official statistics, the average salary is about 40,000 – or, more likely — 30,000 rubles.”

—Pro-Kremlin political talk show host Vladimir Sovolyov’s YouTube channel in an hours-long live stream of the events dubbed them “Maidan in Washington,” in a reference to civil unrest in Ukraine in 2013-2014.

— The Kommersant business daily called the storming a "pogrom" on the US Capitol

— Two Russian senators, including Alexei Pushkov, the head of the committee for information policy, shared conspiracy theories voiced by Republican Congressman Matt Gaetz alleging the involvement of the far-left anti-fascist group known as "antifa" in the disturbances.

— Leonid Slutsky, chairman of the lower-house State Duma International Affairs Committee:

"The unrest on Capitol Hill that interrupted the official affirmation of electoral votes in Congress certainly casts a shadow on the entire process of the democratic transfer of power ... As we can see, the boomerang of 'color revolutions' [in post-Soviet countries] is coming back to the U.S. All this threatens to turn into a crisis of the American system of power in the new century."

— Russia's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova simply shared former CNN Moscow bureau chief Jill Dougherty's tweet arguing that the U.S. "will never again be able to tell the world that we are the paragon of democracy."

— Konstantin Kosachev, chairman of the upper-house Federation Council's Committee on Foreign Affairs:

"American democracy is obviously limping on both legs… The holiday of democracy is over. This is sadly a new low, I say this without a shadow of malice. America is no longer plotting a course and has thus lost all rights to set one, let alone impose it on others."

— Vladimir Zhirinovsky, far-right Liberal Democratic Party leader:

— Dmitry Polyansky, deputy UN envoy (retweeted by the official account of Russia's mission to the UN):

"Why do you call storming by protestors of U.S. Capitol 'domestic terrorism' and similar and much more bloody events in Kiev in 2014 'revolution of dignity'?"

Live Updates: Devices found near DNC, RNC amid Capitol riots were explosives, official says

Dan Scavino, the White House deputy chief of staff, posted a statement from President Trump on Twitter that called for calm.

By Adam Shaw | Fox News

Nation has a 'crisis of faith' after four years of 'violence in the streets'

Fox News contributor Jonathan Turley reacts on 'Fox & Friends' to protesters storming the Capitol Wednesday.

The devices found near the RNC and DNC headquarters on Wednesday were actual explosive devices, according to a senior federal law enforcement official briefed on the investigations.

Fox News first reported that multiple IEDs, resembling pipe bombs, were found near the Capitol Grounds on Wednesday, amid riots that saw pro-Trump protesters storm the Capitol. Four died during the riots and at least 52 people were arrested.

Specifically, two law enforcement sources say devices resembling pipe bombs were found near the headquarters of the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee, both buildings located near the Capitol grounds.

One senior federal law enforcement official confirms those devices were not phonies, "those things were the real deal."

FAST FACTS

- Four people died during the riots, including one person who was shot, and at least 52 were arrested.
- Protesters attended a rally outside the White House before descending on the Capitol.

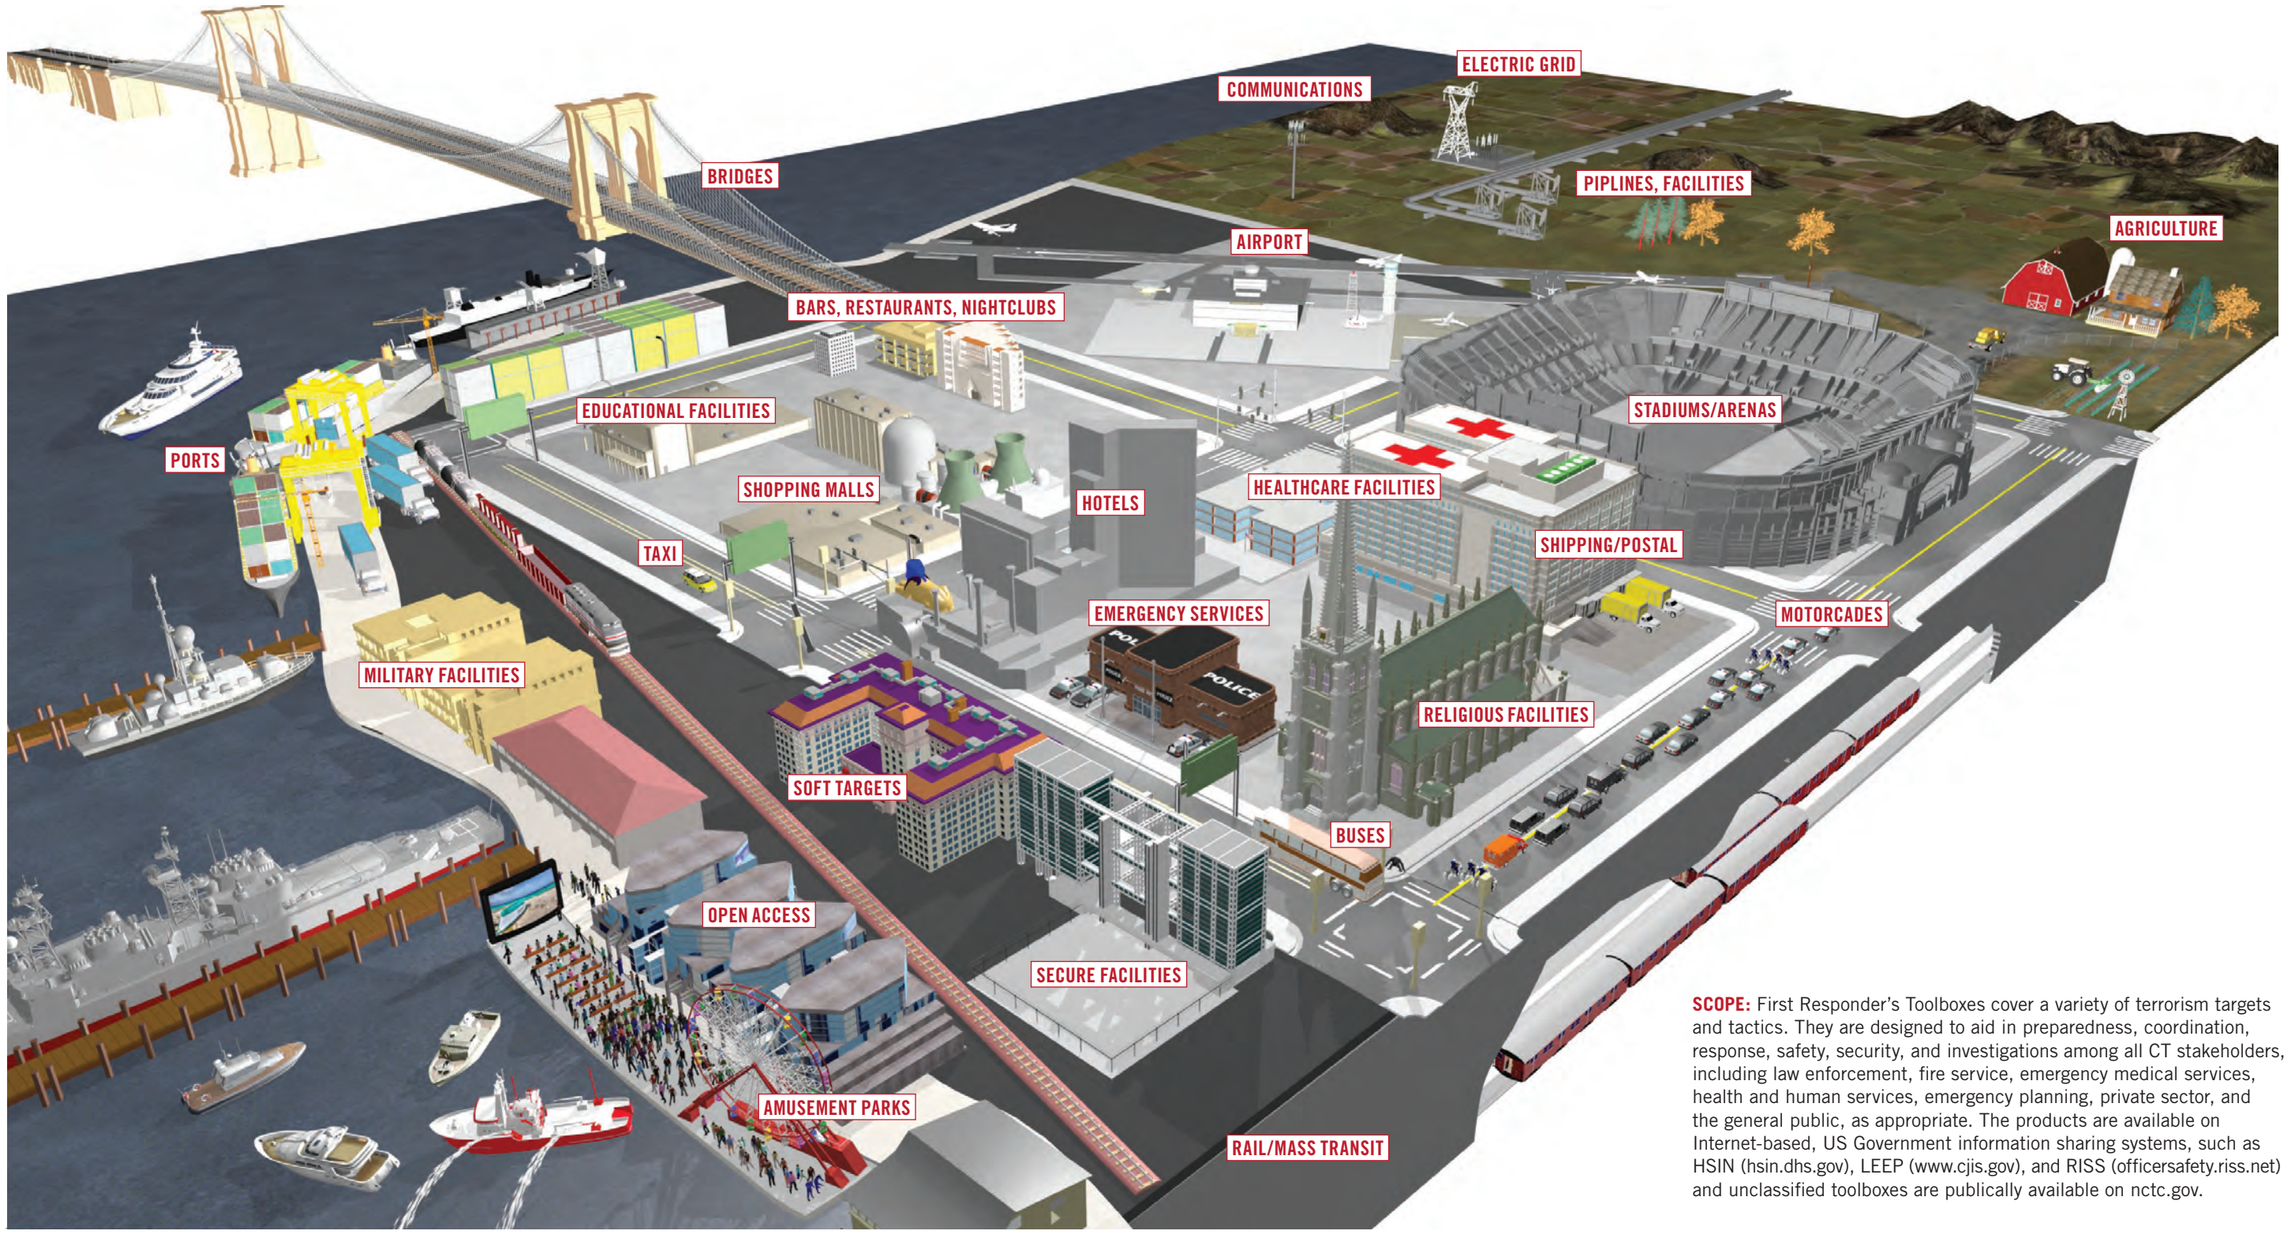
First Responder's Toolbox–A Catalog From December 2013 To January 2021



SCOPE: First Responder's Toolboxes cover a variety of terrorism targets and tactics. They are designed to aid in preparedness, coordination, response, safety, security, and investigations among all CT stakeholders, including law enforcement, fire service, emergency medical services, health and human services, emergency planning, private sector, and the general public, as appropriate. The products are available on Internet-based, US Government information sharing systems, such as HSIN (hsin.dhs.gov), LEEP (www.cjis.gov), and RISS (officersafety.riss.net) and unclassified toolboxes are publically available on nctc.gov.

NOTICE: This product was developed by the Joint Counterterrorism Assessment Team (JCAT), which is a collaboration by NCTC, DHS, the FBI, and state, local, tribal, and territorial government personnel to improve information sharing and enhance public safety. The product is intended to promote coordination among intergovernmental authorities and the private sector in identifying, preventing, and responding to foreign terrorist activities in the US. The product should be considered within the context of existing laws, authorities, agreements, policies or procedures. For additional information contact us a JCAT@NCTC.GOV.

FBI seeking public's help identifying DC rioters

By Kenneth GargerJanuary 7, 2021 | 2:36am | Updated

#FBI is seeking info that will assist in identifying individuals who are actively instigating violence in Washington, DC. FBI is accepting tips & digital media depicting rioting & violence in the U.S. Capitol Building & surrounding area on January 6, 2021. https://t.co/3gwcYcehAG pic.twitter.com/RXtFscFjZr
— FBI Washington Field (@FBIWFO) January 7, 2021

The FBI is seeking the public's help identifying the rioters who barged into the Capitol building on Wednesday.

The federal agency said in a statement that it is looking for footage from the chaos that left a trail of destruction and sent lawmakers into lockdown.

"If you have witnessed unlawful violent actions, we urge you to submit any information, photos, or videos that could be relevant at fbi.gov/USCapitol," the FBI said.

As of late Wednesday, 52 people were arrested in connection to the riots, according to Metropolitan DC Police Chief Robert Contee.

Much of the destruction was captured on camera, including acts of vandalism and theft, and has since been published by media outlets.

NOAA WEATHER OUTLOOK

Today: Thursday, January 07, 2021

The Pacific Northwest will experience a break in the precipitation for much of today as the associated frontal system dissipates.

- Meanwhile, a batch of light snow will move across the northern Rockies into the northern High Plains today due to a lingering wave of low pressure along a weak front.
- This system will become diffused on Friday as moderate to heavy precipitation pushes onshore once again across the Pacific Northwest ahead of an active cold front.
- A couple of inches of rain can be expected along the Coastal Ranges of northern California.
- Meanwhile, 6 to 12 inches of snowfall is forecast for the higher elevations of the Olympic and Cascade Ranges.
- This round of precipitation is forecast to taper off Friday night as the associated moisture spreads rapidly inland, bringing another period of light snow through the northern Rockies Friday night and into the central Rockies by early on Saturday.

In the meantime, a low-pressure system will be traversing the Deep South, the Southeast and the Mid-Atlantic through early on Saturday.

- This system will spread showers and thunderstorms steadily from west to east through these areas, with embedded severe thunderstorms possible near the Gulf Coast.
- In addition, some of these storms may cause localized areas of heavy rain this morning across eastern Texas into Louisiana.
- Wet snow is also expected on the northern periphery of the precipitation shield especially across the southern Appalachians early on Friday where a few inches of accumulation is forecast.
- The system will then bring a mix of snow and rain across the Mid-Atlantic on Friday into Friday night before moving out to sea on Saturday.

Tomorrow: Friday, January 08, 2021

The above mentioned area of low pressure center moving across the South will slide off the Southeast Coast with a secondary low forming over eastern Georgia..

- A cold front will stretch south from it cutting across the southern tip of Florida.
- Rain showers will develop along the coast from New Jersey to South Carolina and across eastern Georgia and the southern tip of Florida.
- Mixed wintry precipitation will be found across parts of the southern Appalachians, portions of the Carolinas and southern West Virginia/Virginia and the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay.

Fair and dry weather on tap for the Mississippi Valley, southern Plains, Great Lakes, parts of the Mid-Atlantic and Northeast.

An area of low pressure will move into the Dakotas.

- Snow expected across the northern Great Plains.

Elsewhere, a cold front will push into West Coast.

- Rain will expected along the coast from Vancouver Island to San Francisco.
- Rain and higher elevation will be found inland across the interior Northwest and northern Sierras.
- Snow expected for the northern Cascades, northern Washington, the Intermountain Northwest and northern Great Basin.

Day 3: Saturday, January 09, 2021

Low pressure will move away from the Southeast Coast well off into the west Atlantic.

- Fair and dry weather expected from the Mississippi River east to the East Coast.
- The only exception will be a few lone rain showers in the vicinity of Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard.

Several weather systems will push across the Rockies, Four Corners and southern Plains.

- Rain and thunderstorms will develop across portions of south Texas.
- Mixed wintry precipitation possible for the remainder of Texas, eastern New Mexico and western Oklahoma.
- Snow on tap for the Rockies and sections of the northern Plains.

Elsewhere, rain will continue along the West Coast from northern California to Vancouver Island.

- Rain and higher elevation snow expected for the Cascades and Olympic Ranges.

FBI Seeking Information Related to Violent Activity at the U.S Capitol Building

The FBI is seeking information that will assist in identifying individuals who are actively instigating violence in Washington, D.C. The FBI is accepting tips and digital media depicting rioting and violence in the U.S. Capitol Building and surrounding area in Washington, D.C., on January 6, 2021.

If you have witnessed unlawful violent actions, we urge you to submit any information, photos, or videos that could be relevant at fbi.gov/USCapitol (https://www.fbi.gov/USCapitol).

Please use this form to submit any images, videos, or other multimedia files you have related to possible violations of federal law committed. Our goal is to preserve the public's constitutional right to protest by protecting everyone from violence and other criminal activity.

You may also call 1-800-CALL-FBI (1-800-225-5324) to verbally report tips and/or information related to this investigation.

If you do not have an attachment but have information to provide, please submit it at tips.fbi.gov (https://tips.fbi.gov).

The U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) said in a statement on Wednesday its email systems were accessed by the hackers who broke into the software company SolarWinds.

The department, which has more than 100,000 employees across a series of law enforcement agencies, including the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, and the U.S. Marshals Service, said in a statement that three percent of its Office 365 mailboxes were potentially accessed.

The statement went on to say that the DOJ had no indication any classified systems were impacted.

A DOJ spokesperson declined to say how many mailboxes were breached.

The statement said DOJ's Office of the Chief Information Officer discovered the breach on the day before Christmas.

Cybersecurity experts have said a full recovery from the breaches could take months - or even longer.

Defense Primer: The NDAA Process

The National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) provides authorization of appropriations for the Department of Defense (DOD), nuclear weapons programs of the Department of Energy, DOD elements of the Intelligence Community, and defense-related activities at other federal agencies. In addition to serving as an authorization of appropriations, the NDAA establishes defense policies and restrictions, and addresses organizational administrative matters related to the DOD. Unlike an appropriations bill, the NDAA does not provide budget authority for government activities. Nevertheless, historically it has provided a fairly reliable indicator of congressional sentiment on subsequent appropriations for particular programs.

FY2021 was the 60th consecutive fiscal year for which a defense authorization was enacted. This regular enactment of complex legislation for six decades depends upon close adherence to process and consistency in procedures, schedules, and protocols.

Committees of Jurisdiction

The House Committee on Armed Services (HASC) and the Senate Committee on Armed Services (SASC) are provided jurisdiction over all bills, resolutions, and other matters relating to the common defense under the Rules of the House and Senate. Referred to as the authorizers or the authorizing committees, the HASC and SASC each has subcommittees that are assigned jurisdictional responsibilities by the full committee. In the 116th Congress, the HASC established six subcommittees:

- Tactical Air and Land Forces;
- Military Personnel;
- Readiness;
- Seapower and Projection Forces;
- Strategic Forces; and
- Intelligence and Emerging Threats and Capabilities.

The SASC established seven subcommittees:

- Airland;
- Cybersecurity;
- Emerging Threats and Capabilities;
- Personnel;
- Readiness and Management Support;
- Seapower; and
- Strategic Forces.

The NDAA Timeline

The NDAA process begins on or about the first Monday in February of each year, with the submission of the President's budget request to Congress. The Administration often submits policy proposals (requests for legislation) to the committees of jurisdiction in conjunction with the budget request.

The authorizing committees begin their work on the NDAA in parallel. Both committees conduct a series of hearings on the budget request and related matters, which typically lead to the drafting and markup of separate bills in the House and the Senate.

Hearings

Upon receipt of the President's budget request, the HASC and the SASC begin a series of posture hearings in which the senior civilian and military leadership of the DOD, the military services, and certain defense agencies are invited to testify before the committees on the budget request. The subcommittees also conduct related hearings, with a focus on issues specific to that subcommittee's jurisdiction. For example, the SASC may hold a hearing with the Secretary and Chief of Staff of the Army on that year's budget request for the Army, and the Airland Subcommittee might follow with a hearing specifically looking at the Army's ground vehicle procurement programs.

Markup

In a typical year, the committees will have reviewed the President's budget request and associated policy proposals and prepared authorizing legislation for markup in committee by late April or May. These meetings are called markups, because committee members mark up the legislation by considering, debating, and voting on amendments to the authorizing bill.

Subcommittee Markup

In current practice, both the HASC and the SASC begin the markup process in subcommittee, with each of the subcommittees considering the subcommittee Chairman's Mark, which is a draft legislative proposal with funding recommendations for matters in the bill under that subcommittee's jurisdiction. At completion of markup, each subcommittee votes to report the proposal, as amended, to the full committee.

Full Committee Markup

Once the subcommittees have all finalized their markups, the full committee convenes to consider, debate, and vote on amendments to each of the subcommittee marks. During full committee markup, the full committee Chairman's Mark, which contains legislation and funding recommendations for matters that are not assigned to a specific subcommittee, is considered, debated, and voted on. The full committee Chairman's Mark addresses a variety of cross-cutting issues such as general defense policy, matters related to the organization and management of the DOD, acquisition and industrial base policy, and matters related to foreign nations and Overseas Contingency Operations (OCO).

Common HASC Committee Practices

The most recent NDAA includes more than 1,400 pages of legislation and authorization of more than $730 billion. To shepherd a bill of this magnitude successfully through the legislative process, the HASC has adopted several common practices in drafting and marking up the NDAA.

Practice at HASC markup typically has not allowed for the consideration of certain amendments. For example:

- Earmarks. House rules currently prevent consideration of a bill reported by a committee unless the report includes a list of congressional earmarks or a statement that there are none. Committee practice does not permit Members to offer during markup any amendment containing an earmark.
- Sequential referral. The committee typically also requires members of the committee to provide, before offering any amendment that involves the jurisdiction of other House committees, a letter from the respective committee chairman indicating a waiver of the right of referral. This requirement is also imposed on legislation in the underlying mark. Doing so avoids potential delay that could result from a sequential referral of the bill to other committees.
- Offsets. The committee's typical past practice also has required that amendments that would increase spending for one item should identify suitable offsets.

Common SASC Committee Practices

Under Senate rules, committees and their subcommittees may vote to hold closed meetings for specific reasons (e.g., to avoid disclosing certain national security information). In recent practice, the SASC full committee markups (and most subcommittee markups) typically have been conducted in closed session. In addition, the SASC proposal is typically reported to the Senate as an original bill (that is, its text has not been previously formally introduced).

Floor Consideration

Once reported favorably out of committee, the NDAA may be scheduled for floor consideration. In the House, current practice is to consider the bill under the provisions of a special rule that structures the conditions of debate and possible floor amendments to the bill. In recent years, the rule has sometimes made hundreds of amendments in order (many of which are offered and agreed to en bloc). After being considered, debated, and amended in the House, the House-passed version of the NDAA is sent to the Senate and typically either referred to SASC or placed on the Senate calendar.

In the Senate, after SASC has reported its proposal, any floor debate and amendment consideration is typically structured pursuant to multiple unanimous consent agreements. In recent practice, the Senate has sometimes considered over 100 floor amendments. However, one or more cloture processes (by which three-fifths of the Senate, typically 60 Senators, votes to limit consideration) may be necessary to reach a final vote on certain amendments, and on the bill itself.

If the Senate passes its own bill first, it is sent to the House; often, instead, the Senate takes up the House bill it has received and considers amendments to it (including the proposal reported by SASC).

Conference

The Constitution requires that the House and Senate approve the same bill in precisely the same form before it is presented to the President. To this end, each house must pass its own version of the same measure and then attempt to reach agreement with the other house about its provisions. An agreement may be reached by the exchange of alternatives between the chambers. Alternatively, the House and Senate can each agree to create a conference committee to propose a package settlement of the competing proposals.

A conference committee is traditionally used to resolve differences between the houses on the NDAA. Conferees are House and Senate members, drawn mainly from the HASC and SASC, who are expected to resolve disagreements between the House and Senate positions and provide an agreement in the form of a conference report. Conferees may also be appointed from other committees with jurisdiction over components of the bill; the chamber may limit the provisions on which these conferees may negotiate. The conference committee will typically begin its work as soon as possible following passage of a proposal in each chamber. Completion of the conference report is not on a specified timeline, but many of the authorities provided by the NDAA expire at the end of the fiscal year. Therefore, considerable effort is put toward completing the NDAA conference prior to October 1 of each year.

Once reported by the conference committee, a conference report is subject to debate during floor consideration, but is not amendable. (In the Senate, reaching a vote on the conference report may require three-fifths of the Senate to invoke cloture.) If the House and Senate each agree to the conference report, the NDAA is enrolled for presentation to the President.

Military Installation Resilience: What Does It Mean?

January 6, 2021

A misunderstanding that sometimes occurs when discussing military installations and resilience is the distinction between the Department of Defense's (DOD's) general responsibilities to ensure military installations are resilient and its statutory responsibility to provide "military installation resilience." This latter term is defined under 10 U.S.C. §101(e)(8) as > the capability of a military installation to avoid, prepare for, minimize the effect of, adapt to, and recover from extreme weather events, or from anticipated or unanticipated changes in environmental conditions, that do, or have the potential to, adversely affect the military installation or essential transportation, logistical, or other necessary resources outside of the military installation that are necessary in order to maintain, improve, or rapidly reestablish installation mission assurance and mission-essential functions. (Emphasis added)

The statutory definition focuses exclusively on those environmental threats that can impact military installations. At the same time, DOD generally takes a more comprehensive approach to ensuring military installations are resilient. This difference in connotation can result in misconceptions of certain resilience-related statutory requirements for military installations.

What Is Resilience?

The term resilience can have multiple meanings and be applied to individuals and populations, networks and ecosystems, materials and structures, and other objects and human constructs. How someone understands resilience is often tied to the context in which it is applied, and the object of what is, or is to be, resilient (e.g., a person, a building). One definition for resilience asserts it's "the quality or fact of being able to recover quickly or easily from, or resist being affected by, a misfortune, shock, illness, etc." This largely figurative definition of resilience highlights the importance of clarifying the term's use within an organization or group, particularly where matters of policy and action are expected.

IN11566

Resilience Within DOD

Within DOD, a general interpretation of resilience may be applied to, and scoped for, specific defense matters. This can be observed in various DOD and military service (hereafter "service") policy, doctrine, guidance, and official websites.

For example, concerning the topic of "Climate Change Adaptation and Resilience" (DOD Directive 4715.21), DOD has defined resilience as the "ability to anticipate, prepare for, and adapt to changing conditions and withstand, respond to, and recover rapidly from disruptions." This definition is associated explicitly with the impacts of climate change and applies to all aspects of DOD (e.g., installations; personnel; operations; transportation; supply chains; research, development, testing, and evaluation). In another example, the Army defines resilience for the Army Recovery Care Program—a program that serves wounded, ill, and injured soldiers—as "the mental, physical, emotional and behavioral ability to face and cope with adversity, adapt to change, recover, learn and grow from setbacks."

These examples show the differences in how resilience can be defined within DOD. To date, DOD has not provided a singular definition for resilience in its official Dictionary of Military and Associated Terms, despite a previous proposal to do so.

Military Installation Resilience

One defense management issue long overseen by Congress and DOD under the general concept of resilience is the effort to ensure the continual operation and rapid recovery of military installations, regardless of the threat posed (part of DOD's "Mission Assurance" construct; see DOD Directive 3020.40).

Military installations are congregations of physical infrastructure, people, and the support systems necessary for them to operate—which consequently makes them difficult to characterize in precise terms. However, statutory definitions are provided under 10 U.S.C. §670 and 10 U.S.C. §2801. 10 U.S.C. §2801 defines a military installation as > a base, camp, post, station, yard, center, or other activity under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department or, in the case of an activity in a foreign country, under the operational control of the Secretary of a military department or the Secretary of Defense, without regard to the duration of operational control.

Under this relatively broad definition, DOD has addressed managing military installations and ensuring their resilience against a variety of threats also in a broad manner. For example, when examining one service's approach to installation resilience (Figure 1), it is apparent the Air Force means to assess and prepare for any event that could disrupt the operations of its installations—be they man-made accidents, attacks, or natural disasters. Accordingly, installation resilience ties into what DOD calls "risk management" or RM.

Source: Provided to CRS by the United States Air Force (March 2020).

How a service determines which threats to assess, what types of operations or missions to review for vulnerabilities, or what the potential consequences would be if a threat were not thwarted or mitigated, generally follows a service's RM framework (see for example Department of the Army Pamphlet 385-30 or Air Force Instruction 90-802). In each service and the Office of the Secretary of Defense are also designated units and offices who oversee military installations and make these determinations according to their assigned responsibilities (see CRS In Focus IF11263, Defense Primer: Military Installations Management, by G. James Herrera). Nonetheless, military leaders at all levels of command contribute to the RM process by supporting the completion of risk assessments and studies that help inform decision-making, and by implementing policies and strategies that help reduce risk.

DOD efforts in installation resilience can take many forms, such as developing infrastructure investment strategies or supporting research projects that inform infrastructure investment plans. They can also be congressionally directed, such as the Fiscal Year 2018 National Defense Authorization Act (P.L. 115-91) requirement for DOD to produce "a report on vulnerabilities to military installations and combatant commander requirements resulting from climate change over the next 20 years."

Considerations for Congress

Congress may consider the alignment of the definition of military installation resilience under 10 U.S.C. §101(e)(8) with DOD's current installation management approach. Alternatively, Congress could consider renaming the statutory term to directly identify that it's related to installation environmental resilience. Another option is for Congress to establish a definition for "environmental resilience" within Title 10 that could be applied to any military term (e.g., military installation, weapon system, personnel).

DATE: January 6, 2021

SUBJECT: (TLP: WHITE) CISA Updates Emergency Directive 21-01 Supplemental Guidance and Activity Alert on SolarWinds Orion Compromise - TLP: WHITE

Message from CISA:

Good evening state, local, tribal, and territorial partners,

CISA has released Emergency Directive (ED) 21-01 Supplemental Guidance version 3: Mitigate SolarWinds Orion Code Compromise < Caution-https://cyber.dhs.gov/ed/21-01/#supplemental-guidance-v3 > , providing guidance that supersedes Required Action 4 of ED 21-01 and Supplemental Guidance versions 1 and 2.

- Federal agencies without evidence of adversary follow-on activity on their networks that accept the risk of running SolarWinds Orion in their enterprises should rebuild or upgrade, in compliance with hardening steps outlined in the Supplemental Guidance, to at least SolarWinds Orion Platform version 2020.2.1 HF2. The National Security Agency (NSA) examined this version and verified it eliminates the previously identified malicious code. This version also includes updates to fix un-related vulnerabilities, including vulnerabilities that SolarWinds has publicly disclosed.
- Federal agencies with evidence of follow-on threat actor activity on their networks should keep their affected versions disconnected, conduct forensic analysis, and consult with CISA before rebuilding or reimaging affected platforms and host operating systems.

The updated supplemental guidance also includes forensic analysis and reporting requirements.

CISA has also updated AA20-352A: Advanced Persistent Threat Compromise of Government Agencies, Critical Infrastructure, and Private Sector Organizations < Caution-https://us-cert.cisa.gov/ncas/alerts/aa20-352a > , originally released December 17, 2020. This update includes new information on initial access vectors, updated mitigation recommendations, and new indicators of compromise (IOCs).

Although the Emergency Directive only applies to Federal Civilian Executive Branch agencies, CISA encourages state and local governments, critical infrastructure entities, and other private sector organizations to review CISA Emergency Directive 21-01 - Supplemental Guidance v.3 < Caution-https://cyber.dhs.gov/ed/21-

01/#supplemental-guidance-v3 > for recommendations on operating the SolarWinds Orion Platform. Review the following resources for additional information on the SolarWinds Orion compromise.

Federal LEOs must wear IDs at protests under new policy

By Suzie Ziegler

WASHINGTON — The Senate's bipartisan vote last week to override President Trump's veto of the National Defense Authorization Act included a new policy for federal officers. According to The Hill, federal law enforcement are no longer allowed to remain anonymous at protests.

Section 1064 of the bill specifies that "whenever a member of [...] federal law enforcement personnel provide support to Federal authorities to respond to a civil disturbance, each individual [...] shall visibly display (1) the individual's name or other individual identifier that is unique to that individual; and (2) the name of the armed force, Federal entity, or other organization by which such individual is employed."

The bill includes an exception for officers working undercover and any employee who wouldn't normally wear a uniform as part of their official duties.

The move comes after complaints of federal officers working anonymously at George Floyd protests last year.

Department of Justice Statement on Solarwinds Update

The Department of Justice Spokesman Marc Raimondi issued the following statement:

"On Dec. 24, 2020, the Department of Justice's Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO) learned of previously unknown malicious activity linked to the global SolarWinds incident that has affected multiple federal agencies and technology contractors, among others. This activity involved access to the Department's Microsoft O365 email environment.

After learning of the malicious activity, the OCIO eliminated the identified method by which the actor was accessing the O365 email environment. At this point, the number of potentially accessed O365 mailboxes appears limited to around 3-percent and we have no indication that any classified systems were impacted.

As part of the ongoing technical analysis, the Department has determined that the activity constitutes a major incident under the Federal Information Security Modernization Act, and is taking the steps consistent with that determination. The Department will continue to notify the appropriate federal agencies, Congress, and the public as warranted."

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Wednesday, January 6, 2021

Justice Department Applauds the Passage and Enactment of the Servicemembers and Veterans Initiative Act of 2020

Bill establishes the Servicemembers and Veterans Initiative within the Civil Rights Division

On Jan. 5, 2021, President Donald J. Trump signed H.R. 8354, the Servicemembers and Veterans Initiative Act of 2020, a bill to permanently establish the Servicemembers and Veterans Initiative, or "SVI", within the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice.

SVI's mission is to support the department in its efforts to protect those who protect us all. The SVI is a proven and effective vehicle for coordinating the department's servicemember-related litigation efforts as well as delivering training, technical assistance, and other support to Assistant U.S. Attorneys (AUSAs), servicemembers, veterans, and their families.

"We applaud both houses of Congress for their bipartisan action to recognize the important work that is being done within the Civil Rights Division and codify the role of the Servicemembers and Veterans Initiative within our organization," said Assistant Attorney General Eric Dreiband of the Department of Justice's Civil Rights Division. "The Civil Rights Division has been at the forefront of litigation and outreach intended to ensure that servicemembers, veterans and their families do not have to bear undue burdens caused by civil rights violations as a result of their military service."

SVI coordinates with Department of Justice components and federal agencies to build a comprehensive legal support and protection network focused on serving servicemembers, veterans, and their families. The Civil Rights Division is the Department of Justice component that enforces the majority of servicemember-related statutes, including: the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA), the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA), the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act (UOCAVA), and the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). The initiative builds upon this critical enforcement work, as well as the work of other department components that serve the military community, by sharing information, identifying servicemember and veteran needs, and coordinating the distribution of resources. The SVI also coordinates its training programs with the Civil Division's Consumer Protection Branch to investigate and prosecute reported fraud targeting servicemember and veterans. The SVI also regularly liaises with Department of Defense, the Consumer Finance Protection Bureau, the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of Labor, as well as nonprofits, professional associations, and law school clinics dedicated to serving our servicemember and veteran communities.

The Department of Justice, the Civil Rights Division, and the SVI are dedicated to its responsibilities to assist servicemembers and veterans. Since January 2017, the division has filed 23 SCRA complaints and entered into 21 consent decrees and settlement agreements providing $11 million in compensation to over 2,000 servicemembers, in addition to civil penalties. The division filed more SCRA lawsuits in fiscal year 2020 (eight) than in any prior fiscal year. Since the division assumed USERRA enforcement authority in 2004, it has filed 109 USERRA employment-related lawsuits and has favorably resolved 200 USERRA complaints either through consent decrees obtained in those suits or through facilitated private settlements. Since January 2017, the division has filed 10 complaints and resolved 34 claims through consent decree or settlement and has secured compensation to improperly reemployed or terminated servicemembers. Since UOCAVA was enacted in 1986, the division has filed over 50 lawsuits to enforce its terms. The division also has achieved many resolutions that did not require litigation to obtain the needed remedial actions by state officials. The division also has filed amicus briefs in litigation regarding UOCAVA to ensure that eligible military and overseas voters would have sufficient time to vote. Our partners in the Civil Division's Consumer Protection Branch have also had success in their work. For example, in August 2019 the branch indicted five individuals for coordinating a million-dollar scheme to target thousands of servicemembers and veterans.

In just the past year, SVI has organized multi-day training programs for AUSAs in order to create a nationwide network of enforcement network. SVI has also conducted over 50 trainings, presentations and other events directly to servicemembers and Judge Advocates since 2018, including 18 virtual trainings since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. SVI has also engaged in legislative and policy changes impacting servicemembers.

As a result of Congress's action, and President Trump's support, the important work of the SVI can continue as an integral part of the Civil Rights Division's enforcement and outreach portfolio. The civil rights of our servicemembers, veterans, and their families are of utmost importance to the Civil Rights Division and the codification of the SVI's role in our organization ensures our continued efforts to protect those who sacrifice so much to protect all of us.
